Grandma's Dream.

I wonder what grandma is thinking about,

As she sits in the corner there,

In spite of the childrens din.

That brightens her eyes so dim ;

And hearing the angels' hymn!

Where the wonderful river rolls,

In the beautiful garden of souls.

And gather the rose of her youth again,

Witches in the Cream

Next morning, with our hopes renewed,

And head did ache with pain.

On clothes and nose and chin.

Yet all the livelong weary day

The cream rose up, then sulking fell,

Grew thick, and then grew thin;

The task began again;

When in walked Granny Dean, who heard, Boulton :-With wonder and amaze, Our troubles. As she crossed herself, And in the fire did gaze.

"Lord help us all," she quickly said, And covered up her face ; "Lord help us all, for, as you live, There's witches in the place !

"There's witches here within this churn, That have possessed the cream. Go bring the horse shoe that I saw Hang on the cellar-beam."

The shoe was brought, when round an She twirled it o'er her head : "Go drive the witches from that cream," In solemn voice she said.

And dropped it 'mong the witches dread That hid within the churn.
