The Pacific and other Railways.

has accomplished the small object he had in view in visiting England, eays, that he is now engaged in making arrangements for the construction of a Pacific Railway through what is now known as British territory. The smaller work we presume, for we have no specific information on the subject, was superintending the construction of the "Tom White," the narrow guage engine, which was to run "Adam Brown," in the county of Bruce, off the track .--An essential part of Mr. Laidlaw's scheme for the construction of the through line consists of a large importation of laborers to whom remuneration is proposed to be made in provisions, money and land-provided that the Government of the Dominion furnishes the means. Mr. Laidlaw's preliminary programme has been approved by a committee acting on behalf of a London; emigration seciety, as would any becoming acquainted with the character scheme that offered the economical removal of a portion of the surplus population of London. A good practicable scheme for the construction of a railway through our own territory to the Pacific is needed, and though the legislature has failed to appreciate the importance of making a survey between the head waters of the Ottawa and the Red River, enough is already known to assure confidence in the superiority of the Canadian route. The vastness and the richness of the unappropriated territory, will, under proper management bear the burdens ineident to its own development, but we must say, - and we are really disposed to be charitable-that we have has little confidence in the ability of that class which emigration societies and agents are forwarding to Canada, to do the labor on a railway, as we have in that of Mr. Laidlaw to de vise a useful scheme and to conduct it to completion. Mr. Laidlaw is not wanting either in loquacity, perseverance or impudence, but he has not the slightest idea that in dealings between two parties-especially if they are equities are mutual. So notorious ts his fame in this particular, that were be to come into the county of Grey-in every part of which he is pretty well known-as the messenger or delegate of be understood as expressive of his
