POETRY.

Our Atmosphere.

BY CHARLOTTE CORDNER. Man's mind has atmospheric laws, Which all his moods control, A king, they reign in every cause That agitates the soul.

Love is the sun which clear the mist Which sometimes round it lies, And Hope the moon which can assist To brighten midnight skies.

With myriad points of light, When we no more can see Love's face; Amid the gloom of night. Passions are breezes soft and mild

Faith is the stars which fill the space

Which sway us by their breath, Or tempests in their ravings wild Which scatter woe and death. Thoughts are the birds which round us

To brighten with their song, Or discords make with voices strange To swell the side of wrong.

Then if we study nature well And learn how she controls, We soon may gain the magic spell, That magnetizes souls.

No clouds can then our sky obscure, No tempests shake our souls, Or CIRCLS in their footsteps lure Our friends from our control.

Cleanliness.

A neat, clean, fresh aired, sweet; cheerful, well arranged house, exerts a moral influence over its inmates, and makes the members of a family peaceable and considerate of each other's feelings and happiness. The connection is obvious between the state of mind thus produced and respect for others, and for these higher duties and obligations which no laws can enforce. On the contrary, a filthy, squalid, noxious dwell: ing, in which none of the decencies of life are observed, contributes to make its inhabitants selfish, sensual, and rerenders them reckless and brutal.
