Human Faces.

This is a subject that is little thought of, and perhaps may be deemed unworthy of attention. But examination shows it to be replete with wisdom, and productive of great happiness in social life. The differences everywhere discoverable between human faces are so remarkable, that it is the rarest thing imaginable to find two faces that have the same confirmation and expression. Each one has an individuality that is at once recognized. Though all have the same general form, yet their simple variations, that prevent an exact likeness .-Pass through a crowd of ten thousand persons; let a person of your acquaintance suddenly appear in that crowd, FIRE ENGINES.—The introduction of and how instantly he would be recogsteam fire engines into use in the cities nized.
