"UP IN A BALLOON"
AN AERIAL VOYAGE FROM PARIS.

M. Sezanne, a French engineer, in a letter to a friend, thus describes the excitement and novelties of a balloon ride from Paris to Mans.

"I left Paris on Tuesday, 2nd November, with the sailor Legloarme.— The wind was strong; it was difficult to master the balloon, the Fulton. It was necessary to leave abruptly. I had some ballast thrown overboard, and we soon attained a height of 1,200 metres; that is to say, the range of a Chassepot.
The firing soon made itself heard. I saw the cannon hidden behind fictitious hedges, the tents in good order, the cavalry exercising; the soldiers, in groups, saluted us in their manner with cries, among which I distinctly recognized some German insults, and with discharges of fire-arms, the bullets from which we did not even hear. The sky was dappled with pretty little white clouds like a flock of sheep; I contrived to keep just above them; that is, at 1,200 metres. We moved together, and I could fancy myself the shepherd of an innumerable flock.

"I hit upon a very simple method of ascertaining our direction. It is enough to notice any striking object over which one passes—a large house, a steep, and when one is a few kilometres off, by looking at this landmark again, the exact direction one's course has taken can be determined. I left Paris in a South-South-Westerly direction, but soon inclined to the Southeast, and continued bearing towards that point till my arrival. Next to the compass the barometer plays an important part, it must not be lost sight of. The balloon is every moment taken with an inclination to descend, which I cannot yet exactly explain to my satisfaction, a little nomenclature is then produced which a little reflection would have taught me to guard against. The balloon, seized by a current of colder air, contracts and instantly descends. A little ballast must be thrown out to check this tendency, but not too much. The fact is that the balloon continues to descend in consequence of the impetus it has acquired long after the equilibrium is restored. If, then, too much ballast is thrown out, the balloon having conquered its downward tendency, rises a great deal higher than is required. This is what befell me at Chartres. I had recognized the cathedral rather far away on my right, and made the point on my map when the balloon began to descend; I threw out too much ballast, and soon began to reascend much higher than I wished. The sun heated my balloon all the more that the air was rarified, and I soon saw myself carried to a height which I could not exactly measure, for it surpassed the limits of my barometer.
I calculate that I was nearly 3,000 metres from the earth, which is, however, not excessive, and caused me no inconvenience. The sky became blacker, the features of the country were less distinct, the cloud sheep, seen from such an elevation, were reduced to light flakes, and the sounds of the earth no longer reached us.

CORNING DOWN.
"I measured on my map the exact distance we had travelled from Paris, and I found that we were going fifty-five kilometres an hour. That is to say, in about two hours I should be over the sea; from the height at which I was I saw already to see the menacing screams of the ocean. I had left Paris resolved not to descend before three resolving not to descend before three o'clock, that is to say, before the moment when the wind, after having attained its maximum about one o'clock generally falls. I then thought I was going towards the centre of France. I was not obliged to descend at time of the day when the wind is strongest and I was travelling at the rate of at least sixty kilometres an hour, since my average speed had been fifty-five. However, it would not do to hesitate. I saw the ground becoming more and more difficult, and the copes of La Vendee succeeding to the plains. I then opened the valve for some seconds and we began to descend; but I was soon frightened at the rapidity of the fall.— The barometer rose as if the needle had been pushed with the finger. Legloarme and I threw out the ballast by handfuls. Nothing did any good.

"Without having time to look at the barometer, I saw by the increasing size of the trees that we were going to touch the ground. 'Out the fastenings of the guide-rope,' cried I; and the sailor immediately executed the manoeuvre.— The guide-rope is a rough cord, full of knots, 400 metres in length, which is carried in the car, coiled up and fastened with packthread. As soon as the packthread is cut the guide-rope uncoils itself and runs out, one end remaining fast to the car, while the other seeks the earth. The fall of the guide-rope relieved the balloon for an instant, and made its fall slower, without, however, arresting it, but the rope as it ran out weighed more and more, and we began again to descend more quickly.

Life in the South.
On election day, says a Cincinnati paper, two brothers named Bigger, with two other men named Norton and Jackson were on a small stream in Texas, when Orestes Watrous, Theodore Allison, and Richard Bradford, three New Orleans professed gamblers rode into camp.

A Remarkable Surgical Operation.
The Toronto Leader says: A very painful surgical operation was performed at the general hospital of this city yesterday by Drs. Aikins, Beaumont and Richardson, upon a man named Mc-Colloch, a resident of Halton, near Georgetown, who was afflicted with cancer in the mouth. It seems that about four months ago Mr. McColloch first observed symptoms of disease in the gums, and supposing that the cause originated in the teeth, he had some of them extracted. This, however, did not remove the disease, which gradually developed itself into cancer of a violent type. Feeling his condition alarming he decided upon coming to the hospital, and entered that institution under the care of Dr. Aikens, who, upon making an examination of his patient, and having a consultation of Surgeons, determined upon the necessity of an operation, in order if possible to save the man's life by cutting out the diseased parts. Before commencing, however, he intimated that it was more than probable that the disease had reached the brain, and this was subsequently found to be the case. The patient was placed under chloroform before the operation was commenced, and as it was very difficult, a large number of students and medical men were in attendance. The disease was situated in the left upper jaw, and had reached to the back of the eye, which was protruding outwards.— An incision was made in the centre of the upper lip as high as the nostril, thence along the opening of the nostril and upwards along the furrow, where the nose joints the cheek; thence along the lower part of the lower eye lid to the cheek bone, and thence half way to the ear; from which point the skin was carefully dissected down to the corner of the mouth. The other soft parts were then divided, and by the use of the saw the bone was cut through to the roof of the mouth where the bone joined that of the opposite side. The bone between the nose and mouth was separated in the same manner, and the whole bone, embracing the upper jaw, including the teeth and floor of the eye ball were then entirely removed. It was now discovered, as expected, that the base of the skull was extensively involved in disease. Caustic was then applied to the deep parts not removable by the operation, and the skin stitched nearly back in its proper place. The patient lost, of course, a great quantity of blood, but there is every probability of his ultimate recovery. The disease may reappear hereafter, as it is at present striking towards the brain. A similar operation was performed about nine weeks ago at the hospital by Dr. Aikins upon a man named Vanloovis, a resident of the county of Grey, and who left the hospital three weeks afterwardly recovered. He returned in seven weeks in perfect health, but fearing a reappearance of the disease; it was found to be simply an abscess which had formed in the parts operated on, and which disappeared in a few days.

filled with invited guests.

THE SURPLUS.
My predecessor, at the opening of the first session of this Legislature, intimated that you began your labors with resources at your disposal large enough to justify the hope that they would prove adequate not only for the actual requirements of the Government, but also to satisfy the wants of this rapidly improving country. The opinion then so confidently expressed, the experience of the past three years has established to have been well founded, as it is strikingly evidenced in the large surplus remaining in the Provincial Treasury, and that, too, after satisfying not only the ordinary outlays required for the public service and charities, but also providing for various public works of great utility, and the erection of public institutions which are no less creditable to your liberality than productive of lasting benefit to suffering humanity and to the general interests of the Province at large.
