AN AMUSING INCIDENT.

In one of the larger towns of Worcester County, Massachusetts, used to live a clergyman whom we will call Ridewell. He was of the Baptist persuasion, and very rigid in his ideas of moral propriety. He had in his employ an old negro named Pompey; and if this latter individual was not so strict in his morals as his master, he was at least a very cunning dog, and passed in the reverend household for a pattern of propriety. Pompey was a useful servant, and the old clergyman never hesitated to trust him with the most important business.

Now it so happened that there were, residing in and about the town, sundry individuals who had not the fear of the dreadful penalties which Mr. Ridewell preached about before their eyes, for it was the wont of these people to congregate on Sabbath evenings upon a level piece of land in the outskirts of the village, and there race horses. This spot was hidden from view by a dense piece of wood, and for a long while the Sunday evening races were carried on there without detection by the officers, or those who might have stopped them.

It also happened that the good old clergyman owned one of the best horses in the county. This horse was Morgan stock, with a mixture of the Arabian blood in his veins, and it was generally known that few beasts could pass him on the road. Mr. Ridewell, with a dignified becoming his calling, stoutly declared that the fleetness of his horse never forfeited him any gratification, and that for his own part he would as lief be any other. Yet money could not his Morgan, nor any amount of argument persuade him to swap. The church was so near to the good clergyman's dwelling that he always walked to meeting, and his horse was consequently allowed to remain in the pasture.

Pompey discovered that the races were on the tapis, and he resolved to enter his master's horse.
