NOT ALWAYS SALT WATER.

There was once a time when the ocean, although not fresh, was merely brackish and not salt as it is now. This was when the earth was in its first youth, and before there was any land showing at all, or any animal life in the water. At this time the water was gradually cooling from its original state of steam, and the salts were slowly undergoing the change from gases into solids. Then came the appearance of land, and later on rivers, which gradually washed down more and more salts, while at the bottom of the ocean itself chemical action was constantly adding more brine to the waters. At present it is estimated there are in the world's oceans 7,000,000 cubic miles of salt, and the most astonishing thing about it is that if all this salt could be taken out in a moment, the level of the water would not drop one single inch.

OXFORD STUDENTS' HILARITY.

Oxford celebrated a recent visit of the Prince of Wales by an old-fashioned town and gown row of unusual proportions. The students undertook to clear sidewalks and streets by marching in compact bodies with arms interlocked and ran against the metropolitan policemen, sent up to protect the Prince. After being severely clubbed, 14 students and a fellow and lecturer of one of the colleges were arrested and fined for drunkenness and disorderly conduct in the Police Court, while others were fined by the university authorities for fighting the police.
