HOUSEHOLD.

DAINTY BELONGINGS. Certain people's bureau drawers for instance, diffuse an atmosphere of refinement, that is partly exquisite neatness and order, partly the faint perfume of rose or violet, and very largely a natural gift. A layer of thin sheet-wadding, covered above and below with cheap silkoline, or silesia, caught through the centre with a small bow of ribbon to match, and finished at each corner with the same, makes an attractive lining for drawers, and is an encouragement to keep one's belongings in order.

Boxes of various sizes and shapes are also a valuable aid to this end, and it is not difficult to accumulate a stock of quite pretty ones. A lack of outside charms can be veiled by deft fingers, with coverings of plush or velvet or old brocade, and the finishing-touch of a monogram worked on the lid leaves nothing to be desired. The wandering propensities of gloves and handkerchiefs can thus be held in check, and one's sweetness and light not too heavily taxed by having to seek them in haste.

The bureau itself, if low and broad, can be made attractive with very little expenditure. A sheer organdie muslin, with a pattern of roses and leaves, makes a beautiful cover for the top, corners with rosettes of the narrowest ribbon in pink, green and brown. The round pin-cushion to match has an air of elegance quite independent of a money basis.

On this foundation prettily wrought metal boxes that are quite inexpensive show to great advantage; and a pair of china candlesticks, with painted roses, holding pale pink candles, make the prettiest of finishing touches.

Some people's smallest properties seem to express an individuality of their own—their very bags, paper-knives, and pen-handles characterize them in some way. In nothing, perhaps, is this so strongly accentuated as in the matter of orris root. A whiff of rose petals or of orris root has the faintest of associations; but the overpowering attar of roses or violet perfume affects the cultivated sense as a glaring color does the eye, or discord the ear.

RULES FOR A WIFE. Perhaps the rules which Isabel, Lady Burton, wrote out for her own observance in preparation for her life association with the hero of her girlish adoration may be suggestive to others who are about to enter upon, or even those who have already assumed the duties and responsibilities of wifehood.

The first refers to friendship and companionship; the next to the care of her husband when ailing; the third acknowledges the prime need of making home pleasing and attractive, not only to her husband, but to his friends and guests. The fourth is in reference to the importance of self-improvement and education; the fifth on the duty of being ready to change quarters, follow on journeys, at an hour's warning, and being ready and able to "rough it"; the sixth inculcates the need of care in personal appearance and for generosity in affection and its expression; the seventh dwells on the duty of promoting her husband's interests, social, personal and professional.

The following ten paragraphs of Lady Burton's advice to herself are worthy of full inscription: "Never confide your domestic affairs to your female friends. "Hide his faults from everyone and back him up through every difficulty and trouble. "Never permit any one to speak disrespectfully of him before you; and if any one does, no matter how difficult, leave the room. Never permit any one to tell you anything about him, especially of his conduct with regard to other women. Never hurt his feelings by a rude remark or jest. Never answer when he finds fault; and never reproach him when he is in the wrong. "Especially when he tells you of it, nor take advantage of it when you are angry; and always keep his heart up when he has made a failure. "Keep all disagreements for your own room and never let others find them out. "Never ask him not to do anything, for instance, with regard to other women, or any one you particularly dislike; trust him, and tell him everything except another person's secret. "Do not bother him with religious talk. Be religious yourself and give good example, take life seriously and earnestly, pray for and procure prayers for him, without his knowing it, and do all you can for him without his knowing it, and let all your life be something that will win mercy from God for him. You might try to say a little prayer with him every night before lying down to sleep, and gently draw him to be good to the poor and more gentle and forbearing to others. This implies that Lady Burton was to marry an unconverted man. No Christian woman should marry a man to whom reasonable religious talk would seem a bother. "Cultivate your own good health, spirits and nerves, to enable you to carry out your mission. "Never open his letters, nor appear inquisitive about anything he does not volunteer to tell you. "Never interfere between him and his family; encourage their being with him, and forward everything he wishes to do for them, and treat them in every respect, as far as they will let you, as if they were your own. "Keep everything going, and let nothing ever be at a standstill. "Might it not be that the following of similar resolutions might help lead other women to the realization of their "romance?"

A DIPLOMATIC MYSTERY.

Why Russia Does Not March on the Sultan's Capital. The chief mystery of European diplomacy is Russian inaction when the goal of her ambition is apparently within reach. In 1855 Russia's progress toward Constantinople was blocked by France and England in the Crimean War, and in 1878, when peace was dictated at the gates of the Sultan's capital, Lord Beaconsfield compelled the revision of the treaty at the Congress of Berlin.

The conditions of statecraft have changed, and Russia's march toward Constantinople now seems to be unopposed, yet she hesitates to go on, even when the Armenian massacres, the Cretan revolt and the Greek invasion of Turkey have given her favorable opportunities for decisive action.

A second Crimean War is clearly impossible. France is Russia's closest ally and England will never fight another battle for the Turk. Russia has no longer any cause for dreading a renewal of Lord Beaconsfield's tactics, by which her ambitions were baffled after her last campaign with Turkey. England, appalled by recent exhibitions of Turkish barbarity, is prepared to sanction a Russian occupation of Constantinople.

Germany is also bent upon supporting Russia at all hazards. The German Emperor, while compelling Bismarck to spend his old age in retirement, has followed the veteran's general policy, which was to cultivate intimate relations with Russia; while making a defensive alliance with Austria-Hungary and Italy. The Russian-French alliance has tended to intensify Germany's anxiety to remain on the best possible terms with Russia.

This was the secret motive of the German Emperor's recent visit to St. Petersburg, when he was received by the tsar with pomp and cordiality befitting a powerful ally. Austria-Hungary made a secret treaty with Russia before the Russo-Turkish war of 1877, by which she agreed to take Bosnia and the Herzegovina in return for whatever advantages the tsar might derive from conquest. The dual monarchy secured the promised provinces. Another bargain between the two powers, which will give Austria-Hungary further territorial "compensation," will probably be made before Russia resumes the march toward Constantinople.

Why, then, has Russia hesitated? Apparently England's neutrality, French co-operation, Germany's secret aid and Austria-Hungary's willingness to accept territorial compensations were well assured. Yet Russia, with the way to Constantinople open, has hung back. Whoever travels in Russia and witnesses the superstitious reverence paid to holy places, icons and religious relics, understands one of the reasons for inaction. Holy Russia, with her intense religious feeling, covets Jerusalem as well as Constantinople. She is waiting until both prizes can fall into her hands. She does not want one without the other.

This, too, explains the Russian-French alliance and the attentions showered upon President Faure in St. Petersburg in return for the tsar's magnificent reception in Paris. France is the one Roman Catholic nation in Europe which may interfere with Russian aspirations for Jerusalem. Hence, the attempts by Russia to strengthen artificially the bonds between the two countries.

SEASONABLE RECIPES.

Cheese Cake.—One of the most popular of American novelists declares a man has not lived who has not eaten cheese cake. And truly nothing in the form of pies, for cheese cake is really a pie, is more delicious. Press through a sieve one pound of cottage cheese, add the beaten yolks of four eggs and one cupful of granulated sugar beaten together, two teaspoonfuls of flour, one of cinnamon, one level spoonful of nutmeg, the grated rind and juice of a large lemon, and lastly the whites of the eggs beaten to a stiff froth. Bake in a deep pie-tin or in little patty-pans lined with puff paste or rich pie-crust. The cheese, without being stiff and hard, should be rather granular not soft and mushy. Serve cold.

Peach Salad.—Select five large, ripe, but not mellow, peaches. Pare, halve, and remove stones. Arrange cut side up in a shallow salad dish. Put a teaspoon of powdered sugar and three drops of lemon juice in each cavity, and set on ice. Remove kernels from three of the pits, and simmer in a gill of water for half an hour. Strain the liquid, and add four tablespoons of sugar, and stir until sugar is dissolved. When cold, add four tablespoons of grape juice or any fruit juice and pour over the peaches. Keep on ice until ready to serve.

Tomato Kromesies.—Beat slightly the yolk of one egg, add three tablespoons of cold water, one-half cup of sifted flour and one-quarter teaspoon of salt. Stir in one teaspoonful of melted butter, then beat until the butter is smooth and bubbly. Stir in lightly the stiffly beaten white of an egg, then set away in a cool place for several hours if possible. Chop ten tomatoes which are firm and as small as possible. Scald and peel them. Have ready some grated cheese seasoned, using for each cup of the cheese a quarter of a teaspoon of salt, one-third of a teaspoon of paprika, one-quarter of a teaspoon of ground mustard, a small pinch each of thyme and ground cloves. Roll each tomato in the prepared cheese until thickly coated; let stand for about fifteen minutes, then dip carefully in the butter already prepared, and plunge into smoking hot fat. Fry golden brown, drain and serve garnished with water-cress on parsley.

Peach or Apple Cobbler.—Line a small dripping-pan with a rich baking-powder dough, and fill with peaches cut into halves or quarters and stood on end closely together. Sprinkle well with sugar, some cooks add cinnamon or other spices, pour in enough water to well cover the bottom and bake. Eat with rich cream. Jellied Fish.—Prepare very carefully a two-pound fish, removing all the bones and skin. Chop fine, and stir in a little at a time, a gill of cold water; add a teaspoonful of salt, the juice of three lemons, a teaspoonful of grated onion, twenty-four almonds, blanched and finely chopped, and a dash of cayenne. When all these ingredients have been thoroughly incorporated, pack into a mold and steam for an hour. Set aside on the ice; when thoroughly cold turn out on a pretty china dish, garnish with curled parsley and serve with aspic or mayonnaise dressing.
