Some women look upon economy and niggardliness as one and the same, and no amount of talking will convince them differently. Only the rich can afford to be lavish and wasteful, regardless of the trifles which here and there count for much; but they, too, in their way practice economy to a far greater extent than the poor to whom it should be a law. True economy is something of which every housewife should be proud to be mistress. There should be a pleasant satisfaction in turning everything to the best account and making the most of one's resources. certainly is not economy to stint in one thing and waste in another. The thoughtful housewife does not spend either time money or strength on anything until she has given sufficient thought to whether she wants it or not. She keeps her expenditures telow her income, yet lives well and as comfortably as her resources will permit.

It is surprising what some women can do with small funds; but then, they are the women who think and plan; who have the art of cooking down to a fine point, and who knows how to utilize left-overs.

It is not alone on the table and its supplies where economy can be practiced. Where possible cash should be paid for everything either at the time of purchasing or at stated intervals, as at the end of every week or month when all bills should be settled. Before anything is bought it is examined and well selected. When supplies are ordered in quantities, it is always well to weigh, measure, or inspect in order to ascertain that one receives just what was specified. Such articles as are apt to be damaged by either heat, cold or dampness are put into suitable places and well looked after to avoid waste. The meaning of true economy is to know just what one wants-needs, and then purchasing that to the best advantage. Certainly it requires considerable planning and thinking, but it is the duty of every housewife to help her husband in laying by for a rainy day.

A CUP OF TEA.

The time-honored rule for tea-making is, "a teaspoonful for each per- time. son and one for the pot," but when the best of tea is used a smaller quantity will suffice.

Cheap tea is a poor article; eyes. better have none, for the manner of | You pain me deeply, Mr. Highmore, drying it is not the cleanest in the world and it is also subject to adulteration. Mix them thoroughly in the cannister or jar.

Never boil tea it extracts the tannin which is almost a poison. An earthen. china or silver teapot is better than a tin, copper or britannia pot. Rinse out the pot with boiling water, then put in the tea and pour over it the boiling water; set back upon the range upon the farthest covers, where it cannot possibly simmer, or if you use a tea cosy, cover it and bring it to the table. After pouring but a cup for each person more boiling water may be poured upon the leaves, making more tea of lesser strength, it will be ready when the first cups are fin-

Waste tea should never be thrown out in the summer, but turned into an earthen vessel or glass, and flavored with slices of lemon and sugar, then set on the ice. As Russian tea, it is a capital warm weather beverage. The longer it stands with the lemon and sugar, the better it is, so should be mixed directly after the meal, but care should be taken that it is cool when mixed, if quite hot it draws a bitter taste from the lemon rind, as I found out once when hurriedly preparing some for a picnic.

If obliged to use a tin teapot, see that it is kept bright inside, and frequent scourings will be necessary, as the dark stain attaches itself to all metals. Many good housekeepers have a habit of using old tea grounds, adding new tea when needed and cleaning out the pot only infrequently. This is all wrong, especially in hot weather, for it gets "musty" very soon, again, formerly. teapot that sits about half filled breeds and gathers germs, and more than one illness may be traced to a neglected teapot. WANT OF TACT.

Never say too much. Manners go a great way, and delicate matters managed with tact can be carried out without the slightest blow to the sensitive feelings of the parties concerned. It is not tact to rush up to a person and say; "How ill you are looking." Anyone who is not feeling well generally knows all about it, and does not like to be reminded of the fact.
