UPPER TOWN.

"Jovi non placet," wrote the redbeaded girl in the back seat of the wide, long schoolhouse. Harrison Jenkins, the presiding genius of the place, stood with the class in Latin. These young ors and girls, who looked pityingly to his dark face, were struggling with the verb "sum."

The lesson had been poorly prepared and the issue of thunderbolts was soon rected to shower from this pedagogial Olympus. At last it came.

Mr. Jenkins brought his fist down was truly uncomfortable. ponthe plain deal board with a thump hat awoke every languid mind in the "Is this what you come to whool for?" he began, as if addressing a jury. "Is this the way you use one the most precious gifts that God has given to you? Here you are, whole class of bright boys and girls, with brains enough to do anything you esire in this great world, throwing away the greatest opportunity of your weak-minded children I would have some compassion for you. But your such a lesson as this?" Mr. Jenkins minds of each boy and girl before him. sent to a normal school she will make It was then that the red-headed girl a first-rate teacher."

Geraldine was growing, and she was now tall and lithe of figure, with her big blue eyes clearer and more expressive, as she looked at people. The true soul of a rather designing maiden was showing forth from them. She was glad to receive attentions, and it smote the presiding behind his desk, struggling Jupiter hard when he observed that she walked with one and then with another in the still and balmy evenings. He had another conference with Mrs. Coffin, in which he suggested that Geraldine had better be kept in the house present belongs to the crown of Rusand made to give closer attention to her lessons. When he called her in recitations he was also doing his best to make the girl fail. And when she did fail he did his best to make it uncomfortable for her. She had to remain after school and get the whole lesson. Jupiter made her recite it all, 'precept upon precept," so to speak.

He had conceived the ambition to make a teacher of the girl. He broached ves. If this was an institution for the subject to Mrs. Coffin. He had been studying law, and was now employing the same forensic talents he had used before his schoolroom in a more lucrative if not a higher court. He was "up in the city," and was making a name.

When Geraldine finished her course in the normal school she received the highest recommendation, and the old principal happened to find a good place for her in the same city where Jupiter was making his way.

When Geraldine had come into his office at the end of the first quarter it was the first intimation that he had received of her presence in the city. She said she had come to make a payment, and while she spoke poor Jupiter was turning all sorts of ruddy

One of the sons of Abdel-Kader has a charmed turquoise upon which legends said to have been dictated by Mohammed are carved.

A turquoise to be really valuable must be of the old rock, very thick in form, and as little cut as possible. Sick people turn the turquoises that they wear pale and greenish.

Happy are the women whose turquoises are of a beatiful blue. They have good health and good tempers.

The Baroness Burdett-Coutts must be counted among the happy ladies. She has turquoises that are known to amateurs, and the poorest among them is worth from $1,000 to $1,2000; she has also two sapphires, which are worth $150,000.
