FUNERAL OF GEN. GORDON

HONORS FOR THE GALLANT DEAD BY KITCHENER'S ARMY.

Impressive Scene-Martial Requiem Amid the Ruins of Khartoum "Under the Conquering Ensign of His Own

Daily Mail from Omdurman, thus describes a touching incident :-

the full Nile. Past the northern fringe of Omdurman, where the sheikli came out with the white flag, past the breach in England generally goes with where we went in to the Khalifa's stronghold, past the choked embrasures and the lacerated Mahdi's tomb, past the swamp-rooted palms of Tuti Island. We looked at it with a dispassionate, impersonal curiosity. It was except for the solemn minute guns Sunday morning, and that furious Friday seemed already half a lifetime behind us. The volleys had dwindled out of our ears, and the smoke out of our nostrils, and to-day we were going to the funeral of Gordon. After nearly fourteen years the Christian soldier was to have Christian burial.

ment of every corps, white, or black, or yellow, that had taken part in the could be spared from duty was there, battalion, one or two from each unit of the Egyptian army. That we were going up to Khartoum at all was evidence of our triumph; yet if you looked about you, triumph was not the note. The most reckless subaltern, the most barbarous black was touched with gravity. We were going to perform a necessary duty, which had been put off far, far too long.

Fourteen years next January- yet even through the humiliating thought there ran a whisper of triumph. We may be slow; but in that very slowness we show that we do not forget. Soon or late, we give our own their due. Here were men that fought for Gordon's life while he lived-Kitchener, who went disguised and alone among the furious enemies to get news of him; Wauchope, who at Tamai and Kirbekan; Stuart-Wortlay, who missed by but two days the chance of dying at his side. And here, too, were boys who could hardly lisp when their mothers told them that Gordon was dead, grown up now, and appearing in the fulness of time to exact ten thousand lives for one. Gordon my die-other Gordons may die in the future-but the same clean-Hot Air Furnaces, Shingle limbed brood will grow up and avenge

They stared Sole Plates and Points for at us; but we looked beyond them to different ploughs in use. Casting a large building rising from a crumbling quay. You could see that it had once been a handsome building of the type you know in Cairo or Alexandria -all stone, and stucco, two-storied, faced with tall regular windows. Now the upper storey was clean gone; the blind windows were filled up with bricks; the stucco was all scars, and you could walk up to the roof on rubble. In front was an acacia, such as grow in Ismailia on the Ghezireh at Cairo, only unpruned-deep luscious green, only drooping like a weeping but alone in majesty under the conwillow. At that most ordinary sight quering ensign of his own people. everybody grew very solemn. For it was a piece of new world, or rather of an old world, utterly different from the squalid mud, the baking barrenness of Omdurman. A facade with tall windows, a tree with green leaves-the facade battered and blind, the tree drooping to earth—there was no need drooping to earth—there was no need drooping to earth—there was no need to tell us we were at a grave. In that forlorn ruin, and that disconsolate Pierre. acacia, the bones of murdered civilization lay before us.

The troops formed up before the palace in three sides of a rectangle-Egyptians to our left as we looked from the river, British to the right. The Sirdar, the generals of division and brigade, and the staff stood in the open space facing the palace. Then, on the roof-almost on the "Three cheers for the Queen!" cried the Sirdar; helmets leaped in the air. and the melancholy ruins woke to the first wholesome shout of all these years. Then the same for the Khedive, The comrade flags stretched themselves lustily, enjoying their own again; the bands pealed forth the pride of country; the twenty-one guns Geo. Stevens, writing to the London banged forth the strength of war. Thus, white men and black, Christian and Moslem, Anglo-Egypt set her seal once more, for ever, on Khartoum.

The steamers-screws, paddles, stern-Before we had time to think such wheelers-plugged their steady way up thoughts over to ourselves the bands were playing the 'Dead March in Saul." Then the black band was playing the march from Handel's "Scipio," which

"TOLL FOR THE BRAVE." This was in memory of those loyal men among the Khedive's subjects who could have saved themselves by treachery, but preferred to die with Gordon. Next fell a deeper hush than ever, that had followed the fierce salute, Four chaplains-Catholic, Anglican, Presbyterian and Methodist - came slowly forward and ranged themselves, with their backs to the palace, just before the Sirdar. The Presbyterian read the Fifteenth Psalm, The Anglican led the rustling whisper of the Lord's Prayer. Snow-haired Father Brindle, best beloved of priests, laid On the steamers there was a detach- his helmet at his feet and read a memorial prayer, bareheaded in the sun. Then came forth the pipers and wailed a dirge, and the Sudanese played, vengeance. Every white officer that "Abide With Me." Perhaps lips did twitch just a little to see the abony fifty men picked from each British heathens fervently blowing out Gordon's favourite hymn; but the most irresistible incongruity would hardly have made us laugh at that moment. And there were those who said the cold Sirdar himself, could hardly speak or see as General Hunter and the rest stepped out according to their rank and shook his hand. What wonder! He had trodden this road to Khartoum for fourteen years, and he stood at the goal at last. Thus with Maxim-Nordenfelt and Bible we buried Gordon after the manner of his race. The parade was over, the troops were dismissed, and for a short space we talked in Gordon's garden. Gordon has become a legend with his countrymen, and they all but deify him dead who would never have heard of him had he lived. But in this garden you somehow came to know Gordon the man, not the myth, and to feel near to him, Here was an Englishman doing his duty alone, and at yet still he loved his garden. The garden was a yet more pathetic ruin than the palace. The palace accepted its doom mutely; the garden strove against

The figs bore better, but they, too, were small and without vigour. It was all green, and so far vivid and rerfeshing after Omdurman. But it was the green of The boats stopped plugging and there nature, not of cultivation; leaves grew ed away. Reluctantly, despairingly, Gordon's garden was dropping back to hateful Soudan apple, the poisonous herald of desolation.

The bugle broke in upon us; we went back to the boats. We were quicker steaming back than steaming up. We were not a whit less chastened, but every man felt lighter. We came with a sigh of shame, we went away with a sigh of relief. The long-delayed duty was done. The bones of our countrymen were shattered and scattered abroad, and no man knows their place. None the less Gordon had his due burial at last. So we steamed away to the roaring camp, and left him alone again. Yet not one nor two looked back at the mouldering palace and the tangled garden, without a new and great contentment. We left Gordon alone again
