BUT ONE ANSWER.

If a man uses the contents of his pocket-book wholly to replenish his burdened hands, can he expect her to keep in touch with the inventions and improvements of modern times? Can she be well versed in current literature, or even have time for the pleasant greeting or friendly chat that help him to forget his labors and overcome the anxieties of his daily toil? If he appropriates the daily paper and reads to himself alone, while his tired wife clears away and washes the super dishes, and plies her needle till the ful of grape juice. Use cold.

One prayer he had added, that on the w the day of the trial he should not look fected up to behold her face. The sight knew would unman him, and he required all for ba his strength; still, if he had been able game, to endure what he had done, his back "An would grow to the burden of the rest. steady If, indeed she were there, he wonder- you?" ed which face she would wear ?-the Ro one that he had known and worship- funny ped, or the other, all disfigured and lots branded, as it had been that awful mous morning, with the terrible stamp of trick

-but his thoughts seldom got further. perse Often, too, he thought of Barry, the gent fast friend of over twenty years, who get had remained his friend long after so a both had outstripped the ephemeral Da friendships that had strewn their and paths, and whom he had taken into pine his house as carelessly and securely He as if he were his other self.

True they had met but seldom. Bar- ly g ry dined each night at his club, and the their morning hours of going out were year not the same. It had, moreover, been bab an understood thing that there was you to be no running in and out of each J other's rooms, and a message was al- dea ways to be sent to know if one could sof receive the other. This rule had al- | wit ways been adhered to, and Jack could he scarcely have told how it was that | E such meetings had become rarer and " more rare-only one day, when Eliza- | sai beth was sitting working apart, too far off to hear their voices, shut in to within those walls of deafness in the which she sometimes sadly dwelt, and "1 in whose coldness she must have peri- wi shed, but for the love that surrounded ber, Jack caught a look on Barry's Da face, quite unconscious, but betray- fe ing such a hunger of love and devotion as flashed upon him an altogether | th disagreeable and unexpected revela- qu

The look was gone in a moment; the h next, Barry presented the spectacle of an ordinary young man intently p watching a young woman in the act in of threading her needle, threading it, a too, as if she loved it, as Elizabeth assuredly did.

Jack had pondered long over the Mrcumstance, loth to put into words !
