HINTS FOR THE FARMER.

MAKING THE MOST OF FARM MANURES.

To preserve my manures in the best way a shed, built as a lean-to against the barn, is on the two open sides boarded up three feet high with an entrance at one end. In this shed the cows are usually kept over night and during bad weather. They tramp together and moisten the coarse straw as thrown out when cleaning the horse stables, and convert this into a well-rotted mass of excellent quality. Everything suitable for the purposes, besides straw, is used as bedding for the cows, weeds, rakings from the flower garden, leaves and pine needles, in short everything that will help to make a clean surface and will rot underneath. No rain ever gets onto this pile. The cows are fastened in different places, along the sides, and a dry corner is easily made moist enough with an occasional bucket of water. Every fall the contents of the shed are hauled to the field and vegetable garden with most satisfactory results.

For the compost heap, I have in an out of the way corner of the yard, made with boards, a pit or box 21-2 ft. deep by 12 ft. long and broad and with a broad partition in the middle. At house-cleaning time in the spring, all discarded clothing, worthless rags old sacks, and the like, are spread on the bottom of one of the pits and during the whole year ashes, waste paper, small rags and daily sweepings from the house are constantly added. For this purpose an old coal oil can, provided with a handle, is kept near the kitchen door and emptied twice or three times weekly on the compost heap. It is astonishing to what amount this will accumulate in the course of a year. A solid mass of this material 6x12 ft. and 2 ft. high, contains over five wagon loads of a very concentrated plant food, for which one would have to pay a snug little sum.

FOREST TREES FROM SEED.

The propagation of forest trees either for decorative plants, wind-breaks or forests is a comparatively slow process, according to Bulletin 38 of the Va. exper. sta. The horticulturists of that station have been making extended tests along these lines and find that the seeds of such trees as the silver maple and other species which ripen seed early should be gathered and sown at once. They can be planted in the same manner and grow as rapidly as peas. Seeds which ripen late in the fall should be sown in autumn and then taken up and planted in spring. Nuts like walnuts can be planted several bushels in a heap and then taken up and planted in rows in spring with perfect success. It is usually practical to plant nut seed where the trees are to stand if nothing interferes with their growth thereafter. On rich soil they grow with great rapidity.

All forest tree seedlings should be grown on a mellow soil, so as to encourage the development of strong root systems. They should be transplanted into nursery rows at the end of the first or second year. Slow growing plants like the oaks should while the more rapid growing varieties should be planted when only a year old. Most forest trees do best when set out from 5 to 8 ft. tall. The tulip poplar tree does very well if not permitted to stand in the nursery too long. At the end of the first year it should be transplanted to its permanent location. The following list of trees are grown with comparative ease from seed: Black walnut, bur oak, hackberry, honey locust, boxelder, greer, ash and pecan.

TEACH COLTS TO WALK FAST.

There is no pace so valuable or so much appreciated and so practically useful in a horse as a fast, square walk, and there is nothing that will cause an animal to be driven harder and kept so continually on the other paces as a deficiency in this respect. Months of time, and hours of patient, intelligent effort are expended to make the horse a fast trotter, a high actor, a perfectly gaited saddle horse, but so far as the walk goes, he is generally put upon the market as nature has made him and rolls along at the pace his owner as a wonder if he happens driven by every one if he chances to be lazy and slow. The fast walker is made so by being put with a mate while breaking which happened farmer of breeder can be too careful in seeing to it that no colt of his is ever driven or led beside a sluggish inactive partner.

DRESSING GEESSE.

To kill geese, have a place where you can hang them with the head down, and then stick a sharp knife through the neck close to the head, and let them bleed. This causes the meat to be very clean and white. After they are through bleeding, roll them up, one at a time, in three of four thicknesses of blanket, and put them into a boiler of hot water, letting them remain there about one minute, afterward lay them where they will drain for about ten minutes more, and then pick them. They will then pick easily. It is the steam that causes the feathers to loosen. It is an everlasting job to dry-pick geese, and this is a sure process. The entrails should be immediately removed, the head cut off, and the skin drawn neatly over the neck and tied. Afterwards place them where they will keep cool, but not freeze.

MILK FOR MAKING GROWTH.

The milk of the Jersey and Guernsey breeds of cows average higher in butter fats than that of the larger breeds. But this richest milk is by no means the best for babies, and those who, in mistaken kindness, order pure Jersey milk, find that it needs to be largely diluted with water or it will curdle in the stomach. The milk is too rich is the reason why so many babies sicken when fed on cow's milk. The milk from a mother's breast has less casein and fats than that from a cow. Even for the calf the milk from its dam is generally too rich. It will fatten the calf but it will be at the expense of growth. One reason, perhaps, why the Jersey breed is under sized is because its calves are for a time allowed to suck undiluted milk from their dams until their digestion is injured.

Permanent Cure of Cancer.

Some twelve years ago Mrs. Elizabeth Gilhula, wife of the postmaster of Buxton, Ont., was taken ill with an obscure stomach trouble which her physicians pronounced cancer of the stomach and informed her that her lease of life would be short.

On the advice of friends she commenced taking Burdock Blood Bitters. The results that followed were little short of marvellous. Her strength and vigor returned and in a short time she was completely cured. Mrs. Gilhula is to-day in the full enjoyment of good health, and in all these years there has not been the slightest return of the trouble.

Here is the letter Mrs. Gilhula wrote at the time of her cure:—

"About four years ago I was taken sick with stomach trouble and consulted several of the leading physicians here, all of whom pronounced the disease to be cancer of the stomach of an incurable nature, and told me that it was hardly to be expected that I could live long. Afterward the two doctors who were attending me gave me up to die. 'By the advice of some of my friends, who knew of the virtues of Burdock Blood Bitters, I was induced to try it, and I am now happy to say that after using part of the first bottle I felt so much better I was able to get up. I am thankful to state that I am completely cured of the disease by the use of B.B.B., although it had baffled the doctors for a long time. I am firmly convinced that Burdock Blood Bitters saved my life.'

Here is the letter received from her a short time ago:—

"I am still in good health. I think Burdock Blood Bitters for saving my life twelve years ago, and highly recommend it to other sufferers from stomach troubles of any kind." ELIZABETH GILHULA.

CAMPERS Should take with them a supply of Dr. Fowler's Ext. of Wild Strawberry.

Those who intend going camping this summer should take with them Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry.

Getting wet, catching cold, drinking water that is not always pure, or eating food that disagrees, may bring on an attack of Colic, Cramps and Diarrhoea. Prompt treatment with Dr. Fowler's Strawberry in such cases relieves the pain, checks the diarrhoea and prevents serious consequences. Don't take chances of spoiling a whole summer's outing through neglect of putting a bottle of this great diarrhoea doctor in your your supplies. But see that it's the genuine Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry, as most of the imitations are highly dangerous.
