Nothing particularly new is coming out of the Boer War. Both parties seem to be comparatively inactive, or at least non-aggressive. The forces under General White at Ladysmith are holding out well and suffering little from the siege. It is reported that Kruger is now willing to sue for peace, yet from a knowledge of past treachery it is doubtful if an amiable settlement would long remain such. The British are willing to spend a billion dollars in the prosecution of the war. Though General Buller met with a sad loss and a sad reverse the British are still undaunted.
