Monford-An action brought by the plaintiff, a contractor and builder, against the defendant, a store-keeper of Keady, for the balance due upon an alleged contract for the erection of a building in Keady for the defendant. The plaintiff claimed that he had made a contract to erect the building in question for the defendant at a certain stated price, and that there was a balance of about $170 still owing by the defendant to him. The defendant claimed that he had engaged the plaintiff merely as foreman to superintend the work, and that he had paid him. This case occupied much time, many witnesses being called by both parties to corroborate their stories. Smallpox is such a fearful disease, and vaccination, when Wiegandt v. Knetchel-An action properly done, is in the main so good of vaccination would be nothing short of disastrous. On this point we must accept the unanimous testimony of opposed by the opinions of a comparhonest, but not scientifically trained, individuals. As a matter of fact, since the use of animal vaccine has supplanted the old arm-to-arm vaccination, there is no danger of inoculating any kind of disease with the vaccine. Such inoculation, when it occurs, comes later, usually in consequence of neglect or mistreatment of the vaccination wound.
