Jean's Revenge.

An avenger need not necessarily be : naturalist, but there are cases where he would take his vengeance more to the purpose if he knew the habits of his victim. Lippincott's Magazine tells a story of Jean, the French Canadian gardener who was found stamping on a little mound of fresh earth and chuckling to himself.

"Ah, m'sieu," he cried triumphantly. "I am not a one to be trifled with! am a cr-r-r-uel man when once I am arouse. M'sieu will remember the mole that has long time ravage the strawberry beds of madame? Every morning madame she say, 'Jean, why catchest thou not that mole?

"But the mole was wise; 'e was queek. Always I look and look, but never can I find heem. But at last. thees very morning, I catch heem. 1 hold heem tight in my hand-so-and I say: 'Aha-a-a! Is it thou, then, that has vexed madame and ravaged her beds of the strawberry? Aha-a! You shall repent of thees wickedness.'

"Then I wonder how I shall kill heem. He must be punished as well as killed. I wonder and wonder, but at last I have the grand idea. Ah, it was cr-r-uel, m'sieu, that way I kill heem! But what would you? Did he not deserve of the worst? But he will vex madame no more. I fix heem. bury beem alive!"

The burglar is a believer in the significance of dreams and has been known to relinquish a big burgling feat if a dream the night before has warned him that he will be in danger should he disregard the warning. A very steady and serious country gentleman had joined a newly established London west end club which offered the advantage of bedrooms for country members temporarily in town. When next the squire visited the modern Babylon he put up for the night at the club, which had in the meantime become extremely fashionable and its hours correspondingly irregular. The squire went to bed at an early hour, when all was quiet and decorous. If there were a racket in the night he
