The fools who take life as a lottery and who are waiting for the wheel to turn to their number never seem to realize that the kind of "head" that wins is the one that tops a pair of browny shoulders. The fellow with a clear head and a willing hand can give cards and spades to the schemer and beat him hands down. If you would do more thinking and less speculating, more hard work and less chasing of phantoms, your balance at the bank would be larger and your standing in society better. All the money that ever was made by chance put against the loss and havoc wrought by gambling, would be as a pea beside Jupiter. The man who spits on his hands and keeps a hoeing will have corn to spare in the winter. while he who trusts Providence and spends his time figuring on how the crop will husk out goes abegging.
