Misplaced Devotion. She was tall, with wavy brown hair and rich, deep brown eyes, just like all brunettes in novels. He was undersized and impecunious, but impressionable and ardent. They lived at the same boarding house for a time. With her he was sentimental, tender, earnest, also inclined to be rash and extravagant with his small earnings in bringing gifts of candy and the like. It is whispered that in a moment of recklessness he bought her two ice cream sodas in succession. But this could never be verified. Circumstances over which she had no control caused her to leave the boarding house without bidding him goodby. Carelessly, too, she neglected to leave her address. He applied to the boarding house mistress in grave distress of soul.

"Do you know," he asked, "where Miss Jones has gone?" "Now, look here, Mr. Blank," said the kindly woman, "let me advise you not to worry too much about Miss Jones. She's engaged. Didn't you see that "Engaged!" he gasped, backing toward the mantel and blindly grabbing at a bunch of cattails for support. "Engaged, did you say? And, great heavens, she let me buy her peanut

Salt Lake's Water.

"When once you understand the art of bathing in the great Salt lake of Utah it is the finest diversion on earth, but it is not apt to result pleasantly to the man who does not heed the advice of the experienced," said a citizen of Salt Lake City. "At any other bathing resort in the world the swimmer can play in the waves, dive and disport himself as he pleases, but not so in this wonderful sheet of water in the west and all on account of its extraordinary saline qualities. So heavily is it is well and favorably known in the bather protects his eyes, nose and ears from liquid contact he will receive esteem of a wide circle of friends, him bitterly regret having entered the such stinging punishment as will make was indicated by the many presents water. The Stomach's Lining.

How are children so often able without injury to swallow such sharp things as pins, needles, tacks and bits of glass? The secret as disclosed by a scientist of Vienna lies in the fact that, when a pointed or sharp edged body comes into contact with the lining of the stomach or intestine, the part touched contracts and puckers so as to thicken itself in that place. At the same time it withdraws itself in such a manner as to form a little pocket and gradually twists the obpoint away, pushing the thing along.

THE JACK-AT-WORK.

One Way of Utilizing the Power of Convection Current.

Have you ever heard of a convection current? It is the current of heated air that is bound to rise from any heated place or object. To prove the existence of a convection current take a gas flame, for instance, or a hot air grating in a sidewalk on a cold day.

You may see the hot air simmering up from the grating, which makes the objects just beyond it lose the exact outlines of their shapes and look wabbly. Here is one way of utilizing the power of this heated air by applying it to a toy which you can make yourself. First cut out a circle of tin. Then cut almost to the center on the dotted lines, as shown in Fig. 1. Bend each cut section to an angle of forty-five degrees.

Now secure a length of strong, tough wire that won't bend with heat and form with it the angle shown at A (Fig. 2). Twist a small, round loop eye at the end of the upper horizontal piece, which is marked B, C, and fasten that wire to the gas pipe or to a wall if the gas pipe is not convenient.

Run a second, lower horizontal wire at D, E, terminating it in a loop just too small for the vertical wire to slip through. This loop is to act as a socket for it to turn in. Now fix the tin wheel to the top of the vertical wire, as shown, after having inserted

Now we are ready for Jack. Draw his head and body in one piece on a sheet of hard paper. Now on another sheet draw his legs and hips in the position shown in the picture. On a third sheet draw one arm, for Jack needs only one. Place your drawings on a thin sheet of tin and cut around the edges of the paper till you have the outline of the drawings reproduced in tin. Now lay Jack's tin body on a block of wood and join his tin legs to it so that the edges overlap. Drive a nail through both pieces of tin at this point Sydenham Mutual and join the pieces together by passing a wire through the nail hole and then twisting the ends together behind Jack's back. Put on his arm in the same manner, and in the same way

Measuring the Rain. .The simplest form of gauge consists of a funnel with a definite area, say twelve inches, the neck of which fits in a bottle. The rain that falls into the funnel runs down into the bottle, of course, and the quantity is measured by means of a graduated glass.

Any boy can measure the rainfall for himself. Having provided the funnel and the bottle-the metal cylinder outside is not essential-let him fit them as described, and then put them in a level, open place, away from trees and cleared, in good state of cultivation, first-class land.
