BUTTERFLIES

By LOWELL O. REESE

Copyright, 1904, by Lowell O. Reese

A saint would have been driven frantic by the girl. I threw up my hands, figuratively, groaned literally and with an expletive not at all in harmony with the best ethics of polite society declared to my tortured soul that she had the sphinx beaten a mile.

The same not being an elegant thing to do, I excuse it only on the ground that I was worried to the point of irresponsibility. I swore by all the gods, from the little mud god of the Digger Indian to the war god Thor, never to have anything more to say to her. Fifteen minutes later I was back on the hotel veranda watching that tantalizing, inscrutable glint in her eye. For I was human, and she was very dear

And the worst of it was she knew it. Once let a girl know you love her and you are lost. "And you don't wish me to go out with Mr. Blakeslee?" she said with provoking mildness. "And why, please?" "First," I broke out, "because you're going to marry me, and that in itself that satisfaction, But I was both angry and in love. "You-well, you know it's as good as settled," I began, but she interrupted

"As-good-as-settled!" she murmured dreamily. "Watch me now!" she said. She lifted her hand toward a brilliant butterfly which had alighted upon a rose at the edge of the porch. Her fingers opened. "See!" she said breathlessly. "I reach my hand-my fingers nearly touch him. Have I got him, though? It seems all I have to do is to close my fingers so-ah!" The gaudy creature eluded her just as her fingers brushed his striped wings. "I didn't get him!" she sighed. "And I was so sure of him!" She jumped up, gave me a teasing smile and ran down the steps. Presently I saw her with Blakeslee going toward the boat landing. A little later they were moving briskly up the river, and then I saw-

Half a mile up the river, and no sign of the canoeists. The wind swept down and almost instantly the water was beaten into whitecaps, and the little shell bobbed like a cork, but I held it straight ahead and watched it with the instinct of one trained to the paddle. And then the rain came!

As I rounded a bend in the channel I saw them. They were huddled under a heavy pine near the water's edge. The waves were trying to drag the canoe away from the bank, and Blakeslee, the picture of woe, was struggling to get it ashore.

I ran my canoe close in and sprang upon the bank before they saw me. It was growing dark, what with the storm and the lateness of the hour. Miss Milwood turned and gave a glad

"Oh, Jack," she said piteously, "I'm so glad! We've been unable to get home! Our canoe was beaten back by the storm, and it upset and we were thrown into the water, and it was mercy it was near the shore, else we'd have drowned!"

"How did you escape?" I asked "We-we waded! And I'm chilling to death, Jack!" Her lips were blue with cold, and she shivered miserably. Poor Blakeslee was in no better plight.

I hastened to right the other canoe with Blakeslee's help. Then I put the luckless boatman aboard, paddled him across to the mainland and bade him sprint for the hotel and get a roaring ALL WORK GUARANTEED at "Live and fire ready. I then recrossed the river, lifted the terrified girl into the large canoe, tied the other behind and set out in the teeth of the storm. Doggedly and steadily, keeping as much as possible in the lea of the shore, we crept down the angry sheet of water. Miss Milwood, strangely quiet, huddled in the bottom of the canoe and said not a word. But I could hear her teeth chattering and I felt love and pity struggling hard with my new resolution to be grimly firm and uncompro-

My muscles were aching and my heart throbbing as though it would burst when at last we drew into the shelter of the boathouse. I fastened the canoes and lifted the wet figure

"Oh, Jack," she quavered, "I should Take Care of Your have died if you hadn't"+

"I beg you won't mention it, Miss Horses Feet. Milwood," I said with exaggerated politeness. It was a mean thing to say. I realized it at the time, but it was necessary if I was to crush the fierce longing to take her in my arms.

I burried her up to the hotel. From time to time she pushed back her wet hair and gazed at me with a pathetic wistfulness which I affected not to see, The storm had blown swiftly away, and the big white moon was sailing through the sky dotted with scudding cloud drift.

I resigned ber to the care of the solicitous Mrs. Kerens, who was all sympathy and bustling motherliness. Blakeslee was there in an agony of contrition. I went away, changed my wet clothing and sat down within the half lighted library, gloomily watching the pine logs in the wide fireplace.

After about an hour a timid hand parted the curtains, and I knew without turning my head who it was. She came in slowly. "Jack," she said tremulously.

I sprang to my feet and offered her a chair. She refused to notice it. She Offers the Following: held out her hands. I in turn refused to notice them. "Jack," she whispered, "are you an-

"Not at all, Miss Milwood!" I rejoined, still excessively polite and proper. "I am merely going to reform." She knew. For a moment she stood silent with her head bent down. I stood gazing over her head with eyes which dared not look for a moment at hers, else all were lost. Then I heard her sob. "It was a bad day for butterflies," I muttered huskily.

She glanced up, and I saw her eyes filled with tears. "This butterfly is tired, Jack-dear Jack!" she whispered. "It doesn't want to fly!"

"Never-for always?" "Never-for always!"

It was good-all that wretchedness and anxiety of long months, when she lay tight against my breast and I kissed the perverse red lips-meek now and sweetly submissive. Perverse no more, for the butterfly was caught!
