OSTRICH PLUMES.

A Good Method of Renovating Them When Bedraggled.

A suggestion as to how to rejuvenate bedraggled ostrich plumes:

First of all, water will not injure a good plume. Wash it in a tepid bath of slightly soapy water. A small basin is the best utensil to use, as you can swish it around the edge without spreading the feathers too much. The soap should be in such quantity as to just make light suds. Run the feathers through your hands gently three or four times to remove the dirt. When it appears clean rinse it in two baths of clear tepid water and drain.

Great care must be exercised in drying a feather, and it is not to be laid down from the moment it leaves the basin until all the moisture has been driven out. To hasten matters it may be partially dried over a stove, but the sun is better. Fan it, but not too much, while the drying is going on.

When the plume is still a trifle moist hold it for about half a minute over a spout of a steaming kettle. This curls the feather, after which it is to be dried rapidly over a stove plate in order not to lose the curl.

Never brush a feather to get it to fall into place; shake it instead. If the ends of the feather prove refractory, they may be given an extra curl with a curling iron, though you must be careful that the instrument is neither dirty with soot nor too hot. The hottest temperature the finger can stand is a good test.—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

THE NERVOUS WOMAN.

What She Should Do to Get Herself in Good Condition.

The nervous woman, heaven pity her! She makes herself and everybody around her perfectly miserable. Sometimes there's a cause for the nervousness, and then she's to be pitied, and sometimes it's just a habit one gets into of being unreasonable and fussy and generally looking on the blue side of everything. When the nervous system gets out of order the whole system lags in sympathy. The digestive system, the liver and the heart all refuse to do their work. Every nervous woman should eat five or six times a day. She should eat three meals, have a lunch between meals and never, never, omit the warm drink taken just before she goes to bed. However, all the food must be very easy of digestion. Malted milk, beef tea, milk and bouillon are all good for the nervous woman's lunch. Gentle exercise and work are as necessary to the woman with nerves as food and fresh air. An active interest in life will be her salvation, but generally the woman in such a condition thinks she isn't interested in a thing in life, so she must keep at work until she develops an interest. A celebrated physician has said: "If you wish never to be nervous live with reason, have a purpose in life and work for it. Play joyously, strive not for the unattainable, be not annoyed by trifles, aim to attain neither great knowledge or great riches, be not self centered, but love the good and thy neighbor as thyself."

KITCHEN HELPS.

The dirtiest frying pan will become clean if soaked five minutes in ammonia and water.

Half a lemon placed in the water in which dish towels and kitchen cloths are soaked is said to sweeten them wonderfully.

In putting away tinware see that it is perfectly dry. It is the little drop of water that causes the spot of rust, and the rust soon eats a hole.

After peeling onions wash the knife and also your hands with cold water, for this will rinse off the onion juice, whereas hot water would set it and cause it to stick.

The flat end of a cork is the handiest thing one can use for scouring knives and forks. The cork should be dampened slightly and dipped in the powdered bath brick or fine ashes and the scouring will be quickly accomplished.

The Kitchen Sink.

Whether a kitchen sink be iron, enamel or stone, it should stand on four legs, with all its drainpipes exposed to full view. A very clever physician once said, "If I am called in to a case of diphtheria the first thing I look at is the kitchen sink." The danger arising from a badly kept sink cannot be exaggerated, nor can any degree of care in avoiding it be considered extreme. The waste pipe from a kitchen sink should have boiling water and ammonia or washing soda poured down it each day. At least once a week it should be treated to a dose of some good disinfectant, such as chloride of lime. This old standby is very inexpensive and quite as good as many of the modern high priced articles. Put a large teaspoonful of chloride of lime into two quarts of hot water.—Harper's Bazar.

The Art of Resting.

To understand how to rest is of more importance than to know how to work. The latter can be learned if one will give one's mind to it, but the former is an act some people never acquire. Rest necessitates change of scene and activities. Lounging is very often tiring, sleeping is not always restful, and sitting down with nothing to do is simply to invoke weariness. A change is needed to bring into play a different set of faculties and to direct the thoughts into a new channel. The woman who is weary and heavy laden with care finds relief in active employment with freedom from responsibility. The brain worker generally finds her rest in playing hard. Rest may be found in many different ways, but it is quite a mistake to expect to find it in idleness.—Baltimore Herald.
