"Aye, with men it is different," said the girl, and the sound of a sob in her voice cut him to the heart.

of the mountain which arose above them thousands of feet on one side and fell abruptly away in a terrific precipice upon the other.

CHAPTER XIII. "MY God!" cried the young soldier hoarsely, straining her to his breast, while endeavoring to calm his nervous and excited horse.

only realized that she was in his arms again, that he had kissed her, and between the kisses he poured out words that were even greater caresses.

gether side by side. "You have saved me," she whispered. "You have drawn me back from the death that I sought. God has given me to you. We shall never be parted."

"I should have been stronger; I should not have weakened. But I shall fight no more. It is all over." "Ah, thou canst not," she whispered, nestling closer to him.

"When go you to my father, Senor Alvarado?" she asked. "When he returns from the Orinoco." "And that will not be until—"

"I have told you why it is always uniform in flavor and strength, of its selection at the gardens, how it is tested and blended—I have tried to tell you all about Red Rose Tea and why it is good tea."

I want you to try Red Rose Tea because I want you for a permanent customer. I know if you once try it you will use only Red Rose Tea.

FREE SAMPLE—We will send a large sample of Red Rose Tea by post, free, if you will write and tell us the priced tea you are now using, and whether black or green.

Consumption

There is no specific for consumption. Fresh air, exercise, nourishing food and Scott's Emulsion will come pretty near curing it, if there is anything to build on.

From time immemorial the doctors prescribed cod liver oil for consumption. Of course the patient could not take it in its old form, hence it did very little good.

turned hither and thither he was followed in all his movements by the lovely eyes of the woman who had broken him and who had won him.

During the interval of repose the young man allowed his party the two lovers were constantly together. Alvarado had made a faint effort to go apart and leave Mercedes to herself.

"What's to be done now?" questioned one bolder than the rest. "Now's the time," roared the undaunted Morgan, striving to make himself heard by all above the thundering seas.

"I think the storm has about blown itself out," interposed old Hornigold, shouting out at this instant. "Look you, mates," he cried, pointing to westward. "It clears! The sun'll set fair tonight."

Instantly a light line was forthcoming. Teach tore off his jacket, laid aside his weapons, kicked off his shoes, took a turn of the line around his waist, made it fast, wrung Morgan's hand, watched his chance, leaped overboard, was caught by an onrushing wave and carried far toward the shore.

and he had yielded. They abandoned themselves with all the fervor of youth and passion to their transports of affection. They wandered away from the others and by the side of the brook beneath the shelter of the trees remained together and whispered.

Today they lived and loved. This time, utterly indifferent to the Senora Agapida, Mercedes, mounted on one of the led horses, rode openly by Alvarado's side.

They watched the sun set in all its glory over the tropic sea. The evening breeze blew softly about them, riding side by side. Then the night fell upon them. Over them blazed the glorious canopy of the tropic stars, chief among them the fiery Southern Cross, emblem of the faith they cherished.

Fadrique, by Alvarado's orders, had fallen back nearer the main body, so as to be within call. "We shall be there in a little while. See yonder the lights of the town," said the captain.

"Where thou art and where thou art not. If I may only be with thee, if we may be together, I want nothing else." She had scarcely spoken before the sound of a cry, followed by a shot, broke on the night.

CHAPTER XIV.

THE terrific impact of the huge ship on the sand among the breakers, which thundered and beat upon her sides with overwhelming force, came just in the nick of time for Morgan. Had the disaster been delayed a second longer the furious buccaneers would have cut him down where he stood.

"Where thou art and where thou art not. If I may only be with thee, if we may be together, I want nothing else." She had scarcely spoken before the sound of a cry, followed by a shot, broke on the night.
