NORMAN DUNCAN

A Successful Canadian Writer.

One of the brilliant young writers of Canada who has won recognition by his splendid work which foreshadows still greater performance, is Norman Duncan. of whom the "London Spectator" which is usually chary of praise, said: "It is" a pleasure to know that there is a writer in the world from whom we may hope for greater things.'

He was born in the City of Brantford, in 1871, and spent eight years at Mitchell, Ont., and from there entered the University of Toronto. He took almost the full course, but left before attaining a degree, as the scientific course did not prove congenial, and the further he progressed the more distasteful it became. His first work at journalism was at Auburn, N.Y., in 1895 and two years later he joined the staff of the New York Evening Post." In this literary atmosphere, which harmonized with his tastes and needs, he began to develop, and his first stories—tales of life in the Syrian quarter of New York—appeared serially. They were simple, natural, heart-stories, told with sympathy, poetic insight and dramatic power, and had that subtle quality of refinement and artistic finish that reveal the personality of a fine mind radiating itself in print. When they appeared in book form as "The Soul of the Street," they won instant favor with the discerning ones who appreciate individuality in literature.

Then he turned his attention to the fishermen of Newfoundland and spent a summer on the "French Shore," the northern section of the eastern coast of Britain's oldest colony. In this quaint, primitive locality where the spinning wheel still turns blithely, where no desecrating railroads invade the solitude of nature or the seclusion of man, and where brave men fight fierce battles with ocean storm for a livelihood, he lived in close companionship with the people and in "The Way of the Sea," published his Newfoundland stories after they had delighted thousands of magazine readers.

Then came "Dr. Luke of the Labrador," another book in which the reader feels the sharp, crisp, cool ocean spray in his face as he lives with the people whom Mr. Duncan has created, and feels with them the little joys and sorrows that make up their daily lives. In all his stories-vital and pulsing with human energy -the work always seems like that of one who thinks in poetry and writes in prose, -the work of one, who, knowing life and its struggles at close range, never permits his experience to dull the edge of his optimism or of his faith in humanity. Mr. Duncan is now professor of rhetoric in Washington and Jefferson College, Wash-

With women, ill-health is usually traceable to nerve exhaustion. Feel ing run-down and tired most of the time is nature's Warning that more nerve-force is required.

You must build up, nourish the body, vitalize the nerves, get more flesh and blood.

It's the abundant nutriment and building material in Ferrozone that enables it to cure so many sick women. It increases the appetite, adds weight and strength, restores lost color and develops a surplus of energy and nerve force that defies sickness of any kind There is living proof in Mrs. Daniel Ferguson, Jr, of Prescott, Ont. "A year ago my health failed. I grew thin and exceedingly pale. At times I was prostrated with nervous and sick headache. All day I was tired. At night it was difficult to obtain restful sleep. My appetite
