TRICKS OF THE TRADE.

During one of the hot contests for the North Simcoe seat in the House of Commons between the late D'Alton McCarthy and H. H. Cook, both candidates were making a strong persona canvas. One afternoon Mr. Cook went to call on a crusty old farmer, whose yote and those of his sons generally went in the direction that the wind happened to blow during the last days of the campaign. There was no one at the house, but behind the barn he came across a daughter Cook that her father was on the back lot cutting wood, but as she seemed to be having some trouble with the calf, the sturdy old lumberman stayed for a while to help her. In the meantime Mr. McCarthy also arrived and in his turn started looking for the owner of the place. It was his wife, however, whom he found milking a cow. The animal was restive so he took her by the horns while he sought information as to the farmer's whereabouts. He started to chat facetiously. "It isn't every day," he said, "that you have a member of Parliament holding your cow for you." "Oh," she returned nonchalantly, "we are getting kinder used to that sort of thing Mr. Cook's out behind the barn holding the calf." The late Justice Lount, who was stumping the riding, told this story on the platform at the expense of both candidates, thereby adding to the gaiety of the campaign. - Saturday Night.
