Maclennan, when Mr. Bond was down, to have him examined on some minor court case which had arisen out of his Montreal property, though Mr. Bond did not go down for this case. In proceeding to the court chambers, Mr. Bond appeared as clear headed as ever. The counsel for the other parties. Mr. A. R. Mc Master, had just started to examine Mr. Bond when the latter complained of not feeling well and asked that a window be opened. Almost immediately he said that he could not go on, the examination was adjourned, and Mr. Bond, with Mr. Millar and Mr. Maclennan, walked to the cab and entered it. Mr.

Bond expressed a wish to be driven to St. Lawrence Hall, which was his former stopping place in Montreal-Windsor-and they dove off, but Mr. Bond's companions quickly saw, that he was in a state of collapse and when they reached the Hall they did not dismount, but drove immediately to the General Hospital. But it is probable he died before he reached there, as, when he was carried into the Hospital he was pronounced dead, about fifteen minutes having elapsed since his first siezure. The cause of death was heart failure. Mr. Bond had been troubled with his heart for years and had been warned of his condition. Mr. Maclennan very kindly assisted Mr. Millar to make the necessary arrangements. and Mr. Millar was able to leave with the body by the 10.30 p. m G. T. He brought action to recover a thousand dollars damages but died before the action was disposed of. On his death the executors brought an action for five thousand dollars in addition on behalf of the heirs and at a second trial secured a verdict for that amount. The case was taken to the divisional court in Toronto and the to the supreme court which directed a reargument on a fine legal point as to whether two such actions should lie in view of the death of the plaintiff. Instead of reopening the case however, a settlement has been reached by which the company pays five thousand dollars-three thousand of which goes to the widow and the balance to be divided amongst certain of the children-and all costs. INDIAN ARROWS.

Grooves Cut on the Shaft.

Why There Are Always Three

In making the Indian arrow three small undulating grooves are cut on the shaft, running down to the head from the lower end of the feathers. This has attracted the attention of some of the ethnologists, who gave the matter considerable study and wisely concluded that the little lines were made for the blood to run through or that they represented lightning. An old Omaha who had the reputation of being very skillful in cutting the grooves in arrow shafts was called by the chief to do! that work for him on some arrows he was making. The chief himself was a fine arrow maker, but he recognized the skill of the old man in this particular line. While the work was in progress the chief's son, who had reached the inquisitive age and was looking on with wide eyed interest, suddenly asked, "Venerable man, why are you making those crooked lines?" The chief gave a hearty laugh and said, "Father, tell him, for he will be making arrows himself some day, and he should know." "Every sapling," answered the old man, "out of which the arrow is made has some defect, however faultless it may appear to be. The good arrow maker takes a great deal of pains to smooth takes a great deal of pains to smooth out and straighten the imperfections by oiling and heating, but the wood in time will spring back because of its inherent defects unless these grooves are cut in the shaft soon after seasoning and straightening."

SOURCE OF THE MISSOURI. Six Rivers Joined Together Form Its Actual Head.

The actual head of the Missouri river or what should be known as such had it been intelligently named is De Lacy's or Shoshone lake, in the National park. This lake, a considerable body of water, is the source of the Madison river and forms with the river the drainage outlet for most of the water of that portion of the National park. The Gallatin, or left source of the Missouri, is formed by two streams, the East and West Gallatin, which unite about a mile above its junction with the Missouri. The Madison and Gallatin are both somewhat smaller than the Jeffer-

Had Lewis and Clark ascended the Madison instead of the Jefferson, which, becoming the larger stream, they naturally mistook for the continuation of the Missouri, they would have discovered the famous geysers in Firehole basin, Shoshone lake and all the country which is now incorporated within the limits of the National park. The Big Hole and the Beaverhead rivers flow into the Jefferson at Twin Bridges, a few miles from the confluence of the Jefferson with the Missouri, so that in reality there are six considerable rivers, all joining one another within a radius of a few miles, which unite to form the longest river in the world, measured from the gulf to the Rocky mountains.

Sneezing.

Sneezing itself is a reflex nervous action and is brought about by mechanical irritation to the ends of the nerve fibers which occur in the tissue of the nose. When this irritation occurs, whether it be due to a foreign body or whether it be due to a foreign body or change of temperature affecting the tissue of the nose, a nerve impulse is transmitted to the brain, and certain nerve centers in the medulla oblongata are affected. This results in certain impulses being transmitted along the nerves to the muscles controlling respiration. By this means the egress of air during expiration is delayed, and the various exits are closed. When the pressure, however, reaches a limit the exits are forced open, "a powerful blast of air is expelled, and the patient sneezes."

An Honest Sergeant.

A military story comes from Ireland. A noncommissioned officer, entering a barrack gate in Dublin, was mistaken by the "fresh one" on sentry go, who immediately saluted him. The noncommissioned officer, unaware that his colonel was just behind, returned the judgment being sustained was carried salute, a thing not permissible under the circumstances. Arrived at his quarters, he was surprised to find an order for him to attend before the colonel. On presenting himself he was asked how he came to return the salute, knowing full well he was not entitled to it. Not in the least embarrassed, he promptly answered, "Sir, I always return everything I am not entitled to." The colonel, taken aback by his ready wit, laughingly dismissed Crystal and Gold Imitation Cut Glass, 4

Sarcastic.

"Would you mind walking the other way and not passing the horse?" said a London cabman with exaggerated politeness to the fat lady who had just paid the minimum fare. "Why?" she inquired. "Because if 'e sees wot 'e's been carrying for a shilling 'e'll 'ave a fit," was the freezing answer.

A Bold, Bad Man, The phrase, "A bold, bad man," now worn threadbare and comic, belongs to Spenser, who applied it to the Archimago of "The Faerie Queene" (i, 1, 37): A bold, bad man that dared to call by Great Gorgon, prince of darkness and dead night.

Self Denial.

The key to success in any department of life is self denial. Idleness, laziness, wastefulness, come from lack of it, while industry, promptitude, economy, thrift and a successful career are the result of it.
