CHAPTER XVII.
 BREWSTER was comparatively well and strong when he returned to New York in March. His illness had interfered extensively with his plan of campaign, and it was imperative that he redouble his efforts, notwithstanding the manifest dismay of his friends. His first act was to call upon Grant & Ripley, from whom he hoped to learn what Swearingen Jones thought of his methods. The lawyers had heard no complaint from Montana and advised him to continue as he had begun, assuring him as far as they could that Jones would not prove unreasonable. An exchange of telegrams just before his operation had renewed Monty's dread of his eccentric mentor:

New York, Jan. 6, 19—
 Swearingen Jones, Butte, Mont.:
 How about having my life insured? Would it violate conditions?
 MONTGOMERY BREWSTER.

To Montgomery Brewster, New York:
 Seems to me your life would become an asset in that case. Can you dispose of it before Sept. 23?
 JONES.

To Swearingen Jones, Butte, Mont.:
 On the contrary, I think life will be a debt by that time.
 MONTGOMERY BREWSTER.

To Montgomery Brewster, New York:
 If you feel that way about it, I advise you to take out a $50 policy.
 JONES.

To Swearingen Jones, Butte, Mont.:
 Do you think that amount would cover funeral expenses?
 MONTGOMERY BREWSTER.

To Montgomery Brewster, New York:
 You won't be caring about expenses if it comes to that.
 JONES.

The invitations for the second ball had been out for some time, and the preparations were nearly complete when Brewster arrived upon the scene of festivity. It did not surprise him that several old time friends should hunt him up and protest vigorously against the course he was pursuing, nor did it surprise him when he found that his presence was not as essential to the success of some other affair as it had once been. He was not greeted as cordially as before, and he grimly wondered how many of his friends would stand true to the end. The uncertainty made him turn more and more often to the unquestioned loyalty of Peggy Gray, and her little library saw him more frequently than for months.

Much as he had dreaded the pretensions and resplendent ball, it was useful to him in one way at least. The "profit" side of his ledger account was enlarged, and in that there was room for secret satisfaction. The Viennese orchestra straggled into New York headed by Elton Gardner, a physical wreck, in time to make a harmonious farewell appearance behind Brewster's palms, which caused his guests to wonder why the American public could not appreciate the real thing. A careful summing up of the expenses and receipts proved that the tour had been a bonanza for Brewster. The net loss was a trifle more than $56,000. When this story became known about town everybody laughed pityingly, and poor Gardner was almost in tears when he tried to explain the disaster to the man who lost the money. But Monty's sense of humor, singularly enough, did not desert him on this trying occasion.

Aesthetically the ball proved to be the talk of more than one season. Pettigill had justified his desire for authority and made a name which would last. He had taken matters into his own hands while Brewster was in Florida and changed the period from the Spain of Velasquez to France and Louis Quinze. After the cards were out he remembered, to his consternation, that the favors purchased for the Spanish ball would be entirely inappropriate for the French one. He wired Brewster at once of this misfortune and was astonished at the nonchalance of his reply. "But, then, Monty always was a good sort," he thought, with a glow of affection. The new plan was more costly than the old, for it was no simple matter to build a Versailles suit at Sherry's.

Pettigill was no imitator, but he created an effect which was superbly in keeping with the period he had chosen. Against it the rich costumes, with their accompaniment of wigs and powdered hair, shone out resplendent. With great difficulty the artist had secured for Monty a costume in white satin and gold brocade which might once have adorned the person of Louis himself. It made him feel like a popinjay, and it was with infinite relief that he took it off an hour or so after dawn. He knew that things had gone well, that even Mrs. Dan was satisfied, but the whole affair made him heartsick. Behind the compliments lavished upon him he detected a note of irony which revealed the laughter that went on behind his back. He had not realized how much it would hurt. "For 2 cents," he thought, "I'd give up the game and be satisfied with what's left." But he reflected that such a course would offer no chance to redeem himself. Once again he took up the challenge and determined to win out. "Then," he thought exultantly, "I'll make them feel this a bit."

He longed for the time when he could take his few friends with him and sail away to the Mediterranean to escape the eyes and tongues of New York. Impatiently he urged Harrison to complete the arrangements so that they could start at once. But Harrison's face was not untroubled when he made his report. All the preliminary details had been perfected. He had taken the flitter for four months, and it was being overhauled and put into condition for the voyage. It had been Brown's special pride, but at his death it went to heirs who were ready and eager to rent it to the highest bidder. It would not have been easy to find a handsomer yacht in New York waters. A picked crew of fifty men were under command of Captain Abner Perry. The steward was a famous manager and could be relied upon to stock the larder in princely fashion. The boat would be in readiness to sail by the 10th of April.

"I think you are going in too heavily, Monty," protested Harrison, twisting his fingers nervously. "I can't for my life figure how you can get out for less than a fortune if we do everything you have in mind. Wouldn't it be better to pull up a bit? This looks like sheer madness. You won't have a dollar, Monty—honestly you won't."

"It's not in me to save money, Nopper, but if you can pull out a few dollars for yourself I shall not object."

"You told me that once before, Monty," said Harrison as he walked to the window. When he resolutely turned back again to Brewster his face was white, but there was a look of determination around the mouth.

"Monty, I've got to give up this job," he said huskily. Brewster looked up quickly.

"What do you mean, Nopper?"

"I've got to leave, that's all," said Harrison, standing stiff and straight and looking over Brewster's head.

"Good Lord, Nopper, I can't have that. You must not desert the ship. What's the matter, old chap? You're as white as a ghost. What is it?"

Monty was standing now, and his hands were on Harrison's shoulders, but before the intensity of his look his friend's eyes fell helplessly.

"The truth is, Monty, I've taken some of your money, and I've lost it. That's the reason I—I can't stay on. I have betrayed your confidence."

"Tell me about it," and Monty was perhaps more uncomfortable than his friend. "I don't understand."

"You believed too much in me, Monty. You see, I thought I was doing you a favor. You were spending so much and getting nothing in return, and I thought I saw a chance to help you out. It went wrong, that's all, and before I could let go of the stock $60,000 of your money had gone. I can't replace it yet. But God knows I didn't mean to steal."

"It's all right, Nopper. I see that you thought you were helping me. The money's gone, and that ends it. Don't take it so hard, old boy."

"I knew you'd act this way, but it doesn't help matters. Some day I may be able to pay back the money I took, and I'm going to work until I do."

Brewster protested that he had no use for the money and begged him to retain the position of trust he had held. But Harrison had too much self respect to care to be confronted daily with the man he had wronged. Gradually Monty realized that Nopper was pursuing the most manly course open to him and gave up the effort to dissuade him. He insisted upon leaving New York, as there was no opportunity to redeem himself in the metropolis.

"I've made up my mind, Monty, to go out west—in the mountains, perhaps. There's no telling, I may stumble on a gold mine up there—and well, that seems to be the only chance I have to restore what I have taken from you."

"By Jove, Nopper, I have it!" cried Monty. "If you must go, I'll stake you in the hunt for gold."

In the end Nopper consented to follow Brewster's advice, and it was agreed that they should share equally all that resulted from his prospecting tour. Brewster "grub staked" him for a year, and before the end of the week a new tenderfoot was on his way to the Rocky mountains.

It made him feel like a popinjay.

EDITOR AND SAFE OPENER.

The town of Renfrew in this Province has a citizen who can open a safe of any kind, and whose fame has spread from end to end of the Dominion. He is Mr. Gravelle, editor of the Renfrew Journal. The other day he opened a safe that had been closed for ten years. This is a tremendous power and it makes one tremble to think what would have happened if it had been employed by anybody but an editor.

An editor is a person who may be entrusted with untold wealth. We do not claim that he is more honest than others, but simply that money has no attractions or temptations for him. In the early days he carried on his business by means of a system of barter, receiving cordwood, potatoes, and maple syrup for subscriptions. He advertised various persons, associations and movements for nothing. He was the means of bringing fame and opportunities for wealth to others, seldom to himself. He was always opening safe for other people.

This is how Mr. Gravelle got the habit of opening safes, and this is why none of our large banks need be afraid when he visits Toronto. To him a pile of fresh, damp exchanges is more attractive and tempting than a pile of bank bills or debentures.—Star.

OTHERWISE ENGAGED.

Some years ago, when the route of a railroad to Atlantic City was being surveyed and the men were driving stakes through the premises of an old farmer, he addressed the leader of the gang as follows:

"Layin' out another railroad?"

"Surveying for one was the reply."

"Goin' threw my barn?"

"Don't see how we can avoid it."

"Well, now, mister," said the worthy farmer, "I calkerlate I've got sumthin' tew say 'bout that. I want you tew understand that I've got sumthin' else tew dew besides runnin' out tew open and shet them doors every time a train wants to go through."

THRILLING EXPERIENCE ON A FLYER.

Mr. D. F. Ritchie is in receipt of a copy of the Elgin Daily Courier of April 26, containing an account of the experience of his nephew, Mr. David Anderson, who was travelling in the Sunset Limited a short distance south of San Francisco at the time of the recent earthquake. Mr. Anderson, in an interview said: "We were running about 35 miles an hour. The train began to rock but the engineer did not diminish the speed until we felt a second shock and then we realized that it was an earthquake. Over the spot where the train stopped the ground was very soft and a spring of boiling hot water gushed from the ground underneath the engine. We were delayed 30 hours by a landslide and a wrecked bridge ahead. Within ten miles of San Francisco our train stopped and then we heard the awful news concerning the city."—O. S. Sun.

SOLD HER UNDERSKIRT.

An extraordinary incident, but one showing the resourcefulness of the fairer sex, occurred just recently. A young lady, a pretty blonde, after asking for a ticket to Yarmouth at the station at London discovered she had lost her purse. She thought and hesitated for a moment, then walked up to another woman and told her of her dilemma offering at the same time to sell her the red silk underskirt she was wearing. After a few moments in a waiting room, one woman emerged with a parcel and the other with her fare.

ALL THIN, PALE WOMEN

Can Learn the Cause of Their Nervous, Used-up Condition.

With women, ill-health is usually traceable to nerve exhaustion. Feeling run-down and tired most of the time is nature's warning that more nerve-force is required.

You must build up, nourish the body, vitalize the nerves, get more flesh and blood.

Let's the abundant nutriment and building material in Ferrozone that enables it to cure so many sick women. It increases the appetite, adds weight and strength, restores lost color and develops a surplus of energy and nerve force that defies sickness of any kind. There is living proof in Mrs. Daniel Ferguson, Jr., of Prescott, Ont. Read her statement:

"A year ago my health failed. I grew thin and exceedingly pale. At times I was prostrated with nervous and sick headache. All day I was tired. At night it was difficult to obtain restful sleep. My appetite was variable and indigestion bothered me considerably. I became morose and suffered from heart palpitation. You could scarcely believe the benefit I derived in one week from Ferrozone. Color came back to my cheeks. My vitality and appetite increased, renewed nerve force and better spirits came also. Ferrozone did a world of good and made me well."

Remember this: No alcoholic stimulant can nourish and build up like Ferrozone. Fifty cents per box or six boxes for $2.50. At all dealers, or N. C. Polson & Co., Kingston, Ont., and Hartford, Conn., U. S. A.

MARGUERITE.

Her parents named her "Marguerite." And friends and kinsfolk said: "How sweet!"

But here I will relate to you what happened as she upward grew. Her elder sister called her "Meg." Her teasing brother called her "Peg." Her girlish chums to "Daisy" took; Plain "Maggie" satisfied the cook. And "Madge" she was to her papa; And "Margie" to the fond mamma; And "Peggie" in her grandma's voice; And "Maggie" as her grandma's choice.

With "Margery" her teacher's word, While "Rita" she herself preferred—Now is the list of names complete. Pray what becometh of "Marguerite?"

Fire broke out in the Commerce Building at Knoxville, Tenn., and caused a loss of $300,000.
