Thos. McMyler, of the 12th concession of Brant, came into town on Friday in a rather uncomfortable frame of mind and not much wonder either, for before leaving home he had made the discovery that he had been robbed of the sum of sixty dollars. Mr. McMyler did a very foolish thing. In anticipation of the coming of the tax collector, he had gathered together the sum of $60, and instead of taking it to the bank, or putting it in a safe place under lock and key, he simply placed it in a dish on the sideboard. He had working for him a young fellow named James Weber. Having occasion to pay Weber a few dollars for wages, he went to the sideboard and took out what money he wanted, placing the rest back where it had been before. Weber left next day, and when McMyler went to again examine the money, he made the unpleasant discovery that it was gone. Naturally, he blamed Weber for taking it, and he has laid an information against him. This young Weber has rather a bad reputation. Mr. Weber, of Walkerton, with whom he lived for several years, says that he knew him to steal money before, and that he is such a liar that he wouldn't believe a word he says.—Telescope.
