SOME GOOD OPINIONS ON LOCAL OPTION

A Success in Charlottetown and Midland

MAYOR KENNEDY OF OWEN SOUND SEVERELY CRITICISED

YOUNG MEN AND THE LIQUOR A SELF-CONDEMNED OFFICIAL HABIT.

(The Globe.) The argumentative appeal to public opinion made by the liquor interests that "local option ruins young men" is given the lie by every day's experience. That appeal was made in yesterday's newspapers, and on Christmas eve and again on Christmas night the young men who staggered along the streets of Toronto came from the licensed barrooms in which the liquors that ruined them were sold under authority of the Province of Ontario. Some of the scenes were unspeakably sad. One young man, well dressed and of good family, hung helplessly to the railing of a bank. Another, of unquestioned refinement of manner, was barely saved by a passing stranger from stumbling headlong into the slush among the crowding vehicles of Yonge street. Five others on one night car were foolishly imbecile. They had all come out from the "decent bar" of a first class downtown hotel. They were but samples of hundreds of others. And men who almost daily have such "facts" intruded on their unwilling attention are not to be misled by the interested declaration that "local option ruins young men."

Indeed, unless the barroom gathers in new recruits to take the places of those patrons who have either reformed or been ruined beyond the profitable patronage of the "decent bar," it will very soon find its own occupation gone. If no more young men would acquire the liquor habit, the barroom would go out of business.

The hope of the bar is in the young lads who are not now its customers, but whose patronage may be cultivated. Those young men may become so enmeshed by the habit, and the appetite for strong drink may so overmaster their self-control, that were local option enacted they would resort to the "dives" and the "blind pigs" to satisfy their cravings, but their ruin was accomplished under a "good license system" when they scorned the suggestion that they might become habitual drunkards.

No, there may be sound arguments against local option, but the statement that it "ruins young men" has neither fact nor logic on its side.

WHAT THE VICE-PRESIDENT OF THE C. P. R. THINKS OF THE LICENSED BAR.

Winnipeg, Dec. 16.—A conference between the Board of Control representatives of the railways was held this morning to discuss the problem of the unemployed.

The giving of "knockout" drinks to men coming in at hotels in the vicinity of the C. P. R. depot received much attention from the meeting. Vice-President Whyte of the C. P. R. spoke very strongly on this question declaring the licensed dives there were a disgrace to civilization. He estimated that fully fifty per cent. of the destitution among laborers coming in from summer's work was due directly to their being doped and robbed in certain hotels, which he named. He ventured the assertion that he would regard it as a God-send when the wave of prohibition now sweeping over the United States would abolish the saloons of Winnipeg. The publication of these charges aroused the keenest interest here to-day.

Mayor Kennedy of Owen Sound is making quite an exhibition of himself in the public press these days. He says he knows where liquor can be purchased in Owen Sound and that there are 61 liquor drinking places in town. He also says that local option is driving trade from Owen Sound to Chesley, Tara, Chatsworth and other places. If the Mayor is as badly out in his other statements as in regard to local option in Owen Sound driving trade to Chesley, not much reliance can be placed on any of his statements. If the Mayor knows where liquor is being sold illegally in Owen Sound it is his duty as chief magistrate to see that every municipal by law is enforced.—Chesley Enterprise.

ermment to remove them and give the town something better. The Mayor calls the attention to Crossley and Hunter and Oliver and the resident ministers that took such an active part against the liquor interest, but the Mayor has comfort in the fact that most of the then resident ministers are gone, and they have got a new class. It is quite possible that the Mayor may find those new men just as true to the interests of humanity as the former were. Now taking the letter as a whole, one would think that it was written in the interests of the liquor men, and that the Mayor would not stop at anything to do them good service. We simply say it looks like it. Let us put the Mayor beside a man and see how he looks. When the liquor men of New York snapped their fingers in the face of authority (as Owen Sound now does), Roosevelt was put in charge. He said it is not the question as to my approving of the law or disapproving of it; it is simply the law, and I intend to enforce it, and he did with grand success. Now suppose the Mayor had said as long as local option is the law I will see that it is enforced, would the present condition of things ever have existed? No, never. Now, we do not wish to say hard things, but this much must be said, he did not play the man and was untrue to the interests of his town. The guilt of the present condition of Owen Sound lies with the Mayor himself.

ECONOMICS AND THE BAR ROOM (The Globe.) A question of fundamental importance is raised in the argument of the liquor interests presented in their campaign against local option in the advertising columns of The Globe and other newspapers. The argument is old, but the economic question which it takes for granted cuts far deeper than the advocates of the liquor traffic seem to recognize. The question is this: Is the bar-room as an institution a blessing or a burden to the community that sustains it? That is a question of political economy. It must be answered in accordance with sound economic principles as these are worked out in any representative Canadian community. Leave to one side for the moment all considerations of a personal or social or moral kind and all disputes about total abstinence, and in the cold, calculating light of political economy is the bar room, as an institution known to Canadians, a blessing or a burden?

It is a sound economic maxim that any institution which does not produce something valuable or stimulate the production of something valuable is burdensome to the community by which it is sustained. Apply that maxim to any industrial institution, to any factory where raw material is converted into manufactured goods, to any warehouse or store or market-stall where the output of farm or factory is made available for the life-needs and comforts of the community, or to any school of education or of the fine arts, and every such enterprise, if honestly managed, is justified in the face of impartial economic laws.

But with the bar-room it is not so. The bar-room does not produce from the raw materials the liquors in which it deals, and the selling of its liquors does not increase the productive power of those who buy them. The sale of clothing, or of foodstuffs, or of books, or of any other useful commodity, is an operation helpful to the industrial activity and the good citizenship of the community, but the bar-room sale of intoxicants tends to reduce the working capacity of the patrons of the bar, to weaken their muscles, to make their nerves unsteady, to clog or unbalance their mental faculties, and to confuse their moral distinctions. The community is not made richer by any valuable production of the bar room, and the capacity of industrial workers in the community is reduced by so much as their patronage promotes the prosperity of the bar.

And it is not in principle alone, but in practice as well, that the bar-room is an institution comes under economic condemnation. The business managers of great industrial corporations in Toronto, in Ottawa, in London, in Hamilton, in St. Thomas, and in other centres of industry oppose the opening of bar-rooms in the vicinity of their works. So strong is the business judgment against the use of intoxicants that all railway employees are warned against even entering bar-rooms, and those who disregard that warning are liable to dismissal. Experience has proved that the use of intoxicating liquors is destructive of the working forces of men, and reduces the economic value of their service to their employers. There are in Toronto not a few great industries, manufacturing, mercantile and financial, that every year suffer financial loss greater than the entire annual revenue from the city's bar-room licenses, directly or indirectly through the incapacity or delinquency of their management or employees caused by the habitual use of strong drink.

In economic theory and in everyday practice, therefore, the bar-room as an institution neither produces anything valuable nor stimulates the production of anything valuable, and for this reason it is an economic burden, a parasite upon the community in which it operates.

ALL RIGHT IN CHARLOTTETOWN

Charlottetown, Dec. 24th, '07. J. M. BENTON, DURHAM, ONT. DEAR MAMAM:—Your letter handed to me to answer by adjutant sparks of the Salvation Army, as I am an old resident and well acquainted with local conditions.

Needless to say, the printed statement from your local paper, enclosed, is simply a tissue of falsehood and misrepresentation.

Would you not think that the liquor party would be wise enough to avoid such wild ridiculous, wide-of-the-mark statements, because they can be so easily refuted and so promptly used to their own discomfiture and undoing.

The "Guardian," our leading paper, is dealing with this statement in a day or two and I will forward you a copy. Until then let me assure you that there is wonderful unanimity of opinion here as to the value of the Prohibitory Act, former liquor sellers and men who are not prohibitionists on principle uniting with temperance men in declaring the Act is the most successful temperance legislation we have ever had. Prohibition is a success here, attested by all the daily papers, clergymen, Catholic and Protestant, and Government officials from the Premier down. The Act was first well tried out in Charlottetown and on its merits was voted in at intervals in each of the 3 counties, superseding other temperance Acts. Local opposition to it is too small to be reckoned with. It would be impossible to vote it out. It would be impossible to even modify the law in the Legislature.

You cannot be too positive in refuting such statements as those enclosed.

I will forward you also the last of the week a statement from Rev. Father Burke, President of the P. E. I. Temperance Alliance, himself a Catholic Priest and a man of great influence here.

Yours, &c., W. A. HAWLEY, Box 464, Charlottetown, P.E.I.
