A person may rejoice in the downfall tional Flag. of what he regards as a bad business, N. W. Campbell, Esq., but he is a mean man indeed who rejoices in the downfall of a human being. What we hope is that he may enter a business about which there will be no question, and that he and his family may enjoy a full measure of prosperity.

THE QUESTION OF THE HOUR

to find a man. Very little positive knowledge can be had of some people. You never know where they are politically, religiously or morally. They're apt to be right with you, and they're just about as liable to be with the other fellow when you're not present. If you and the other fellow are both in his presence then he's nowhere-especially it the other fellow isn't on the same side as you are. Who can admire a person of that style only through a feeling of contempt. Either be a man or mouse, a mouse if you like, but not one of the shilly shally non-descripts that cannot be located.

"Some animated young person in Owen Sound with a considerabe gift as a writer has sent me an anonymous letter with the postage so insufficiently prepaid that it cost me four cents to induce the postman to let me have it. Having got it, it proved to be a slashing criticism of some of my recent articles on political questions. No fellow likes to pay excess postage on an anonymous letter giving him
