KILLING A DEVILFISH.

Sport on the Gulf of Mexico That Entails Muscle Racking Work. The task of hitting a devilfish tro.

a fourteen foot boat was left to the bachelor of the party, the marrie. For Bargains in member explaining that he felt his duty to the ones at home excluded him from anything that smacked so o. suicide. Accordingly, says a writer in Scribner's Magazine, when near the next fish the skiff put out from the stern of the Irene, the spearman standing in the bow, while the skipper stood the big boat away so as to give the fish a clear field at the first rush.

The plan developed perfectly-the throw was good, the fish half tilted the boat with his first splash and then rushed away in a great swinging circle, so that in fifteen minutes it was possible for the sloop to cut across and catch up, when by some maneuvering it became possible to pass the inboard end of the line up to her bowsprit. After that it was a fight to a finish, with the devilfish on one end of the line and the ten ton sloop on the other. For a long while it seemed as though the devilfish had the better of

it. He towed that big boat steadily out into the gulf for three hours and twenty minutes. It was exactly like being in tow of a fair sized tug. The progress of the boat was not fast, but as steady as if it were being driven by the Irene's own engines. It may be fair to remark that killing a devilfish entails as much genuine, muscle racking hard-work as any task on earth. It is much the same as pulling for hours against a yoke of oxen who are moving off entirely indifferent te one's futile efforts. The devilfish will not let simple towing tire him. In left to himself he will sound to bottom and, after resting, proceed on ad infinitum. It is to prevent such resting that one must work constantly by hauling the tow in close to him, thereby frightening him to constant effort. If he can be strained to the point of weakening, then he may be hauled close enough to harpoon again.

The Macaw and the Portrait,

While Northcote was studying paint ing with Sir Joshua Reynolds he painted the portrait of one of the housemaids and placed the picture on the parlor floor, resting against a chair, for the family to see it. Sir Joshua had a large macaw, which he often introduced into his pictures. Between the bird and the housemaid there was no little hostility, as she bad to clean up after him and resented his roaming habits.

When the picture was placed against the chair the macaw, being in a dis-The Misses McArthur of Dundalk, tant part of the room, did not see it, but on retracing its steps the bird at the hated face and even tried to

> Discovering that the face did not move, the macaw attacked the hand in the picture. As it moved not, the bird marched round the picture, as if examining what the thing was, and then walked away. Again and again the macaw repeated the advance, the attack and the retreat. The singular story was noised
