The subject of discourse next Sunday morning in the Methodist church will be "Lessons from the book of Ruth," and in the evening "How to keep the Sabbath"

We are pleased to learn of Miss Dick's enterprise. The millinery business is evidently prospering under her management, and now she is branching out in other directions, having recently invested a thousand dollars in preference shares in Durham Furniture Company stock. The company is in a prosperous condition, and the stock is good buying

Thaddeus W. Tyler, the original of Longfellow's poem, "The Village Blacksmith," died at Lynn, Mass., on Sunday last. He was seventy-six years of age, and died from an attack of pneumonia. Tyler was a young unmarried man, when the poem was written, and he did not exactly fit the description of the smith who went to church on Sunday and listened to his daughter's voice singing in the village choir

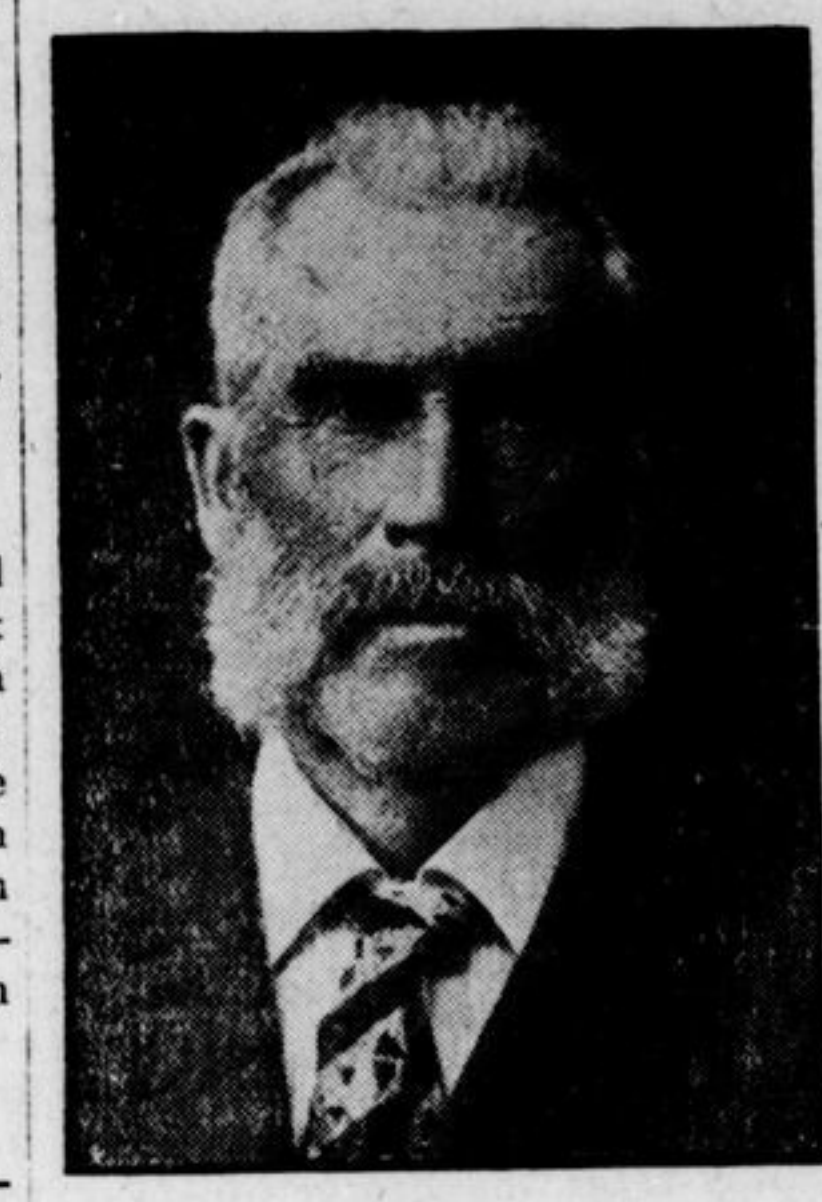

Hon. A. B. Aylesworth is somewhat opposed to H. H. Miller's anti-betting bill, recently defeated in the House of Commons. Out of this grew a wordy altercation in the House between Mr. Miller and the Minister. The matter was aired somewhat hotly for a time, but they kissed each other, and are again friends. The action of Mr. Aylesworth in bringing about the defeat of the Bill, has led the News caricaturist to picture Mr. Aylesworth as betting "five to two" that the Newmarket Canal will have water in it.

It would be a good act for the town council to repair sidewalks where they show signs of going to wreck. "A stitch in time saves nine," is an adage that might be acted upon here with economical results. When a piece of walk becomes irregular, or gets out of shape, it is not only unsightly, but dangerous, and in the event of accident, a costly lawsuit may be the result. A few days' work now would be a help to the unemployed, and the money would be well spent. This paper is not a chronic grumbler, but claims the right to call attention to public matters, and suggest necessary improvements. The sidewalks can't be repaired too soon.

The Board of License Commissioners for South Grey met Monday in Durham to consider the question of granting licenses for the current year, but owing to irregularities on the part of some of the licensees during the past, the Board decided not to grant licenses to any of the applicants at the present time, but to give them all a three months' extension. If during the probationary period, there shall arise any irregularities or justifiable complaints, further extensions will not be granted to guilty parties, nor will licenses be issued. The Commissioners are W. A. Goodfellow, Dundalk, A. A. Catton, Durham, and Albert Weinert, Neustadt, all good substantial men, from whom no favors or leniency may be expected in case of irregularities. Under such circumstances, it's up to hotel men in license districts to get their houses in order, and to keep them so

OUR CORRESPONDENTS.

It isn't necessary to tell our Glenelg readers that this is John McDonald, who writes from Top Cliff and Priceville, as the humor takes him. He has been Assessor for a number of years, and knows every nook and corner in the township, of which he has been a lifelong resident. He's the historiographer of the locality in which he lives, and delights in telling of the early days, when Buck and Bright were used as a means of quick transportation to and from the township of Glenelg, which to him, and to every loyal resident formed the hub of the universe. Mr. McDonald is not as young as he used to be, but he has a great amount of vitality, and from his clear, legible style of writing, a person judging from that source alone might easily mistake him for a boy, but he's over twenty-one years of age, and has fully developed into manhood. We appreciate his contributions very much, and we know our readers are delighted with his budgets, which are not confined to news alone, but to opinions and judgments as well. He's a typical Scotchman, and can "spoke" the Gaelic, and write it, too, as well as he can the English. He's a truthful writer, and if errors occur, they are not intentional. This is a great virtue in a correspondent.

CHRONICLES OF THE KHAN.

SHE WON'T TELL.

So women can't keep secrets. If there is no popular belief that that ought to go to the scrap heap it is that.

There is not a woman lying dead on her couch to-night, with her poor hands folded over the heart that will never beat again, but hath taken secrets with her that will never be known — never, never, never.

There is not a woman lying dead to-night, anywhere, who if she had told all she knew, wouldn't have sent a gust through these streets that would have distressed many a window and rattled many a door.

But she is dead—dead—and some of us can breathe freely,

Supposing she came to life again just for a moment, she would smile in our faces and say:

"Don't be alarmed,—I won't tell." She has taken her secrets to the grave with her, she has kept them sacred through all her life, and I honestly believe she would lie at the Judgment rather than tell!

Good girl!

And yet they say that a woman can't keep a secret! Stand at the office door and watch the women pass by—smiling, chatting, bright. Each and every one of them has a secret that you couldn't chop out of her with an axe.

Phoebe has dropped Tommy Teeple—you will never know why.

She will never tell.

And while we are bragging that no woman can keep a secret, half of us don't realize that if the women were to tell all they knew about us we would be in the discard.

There is scarcely a woman in this old town—I care not whether she be old or young, plain or beautiful—who couldn't make trouble if she told. But she won't tell. She keeps her secrets well, for the best of reasons, some of them slight, perhaps. The reason is not as deep as a well, or as wide as a church doormat, but it is enough.

I don't know what young Teeple said or did to Phoebe, but I know he's out of it. He got gay, likely, too fresh. She could tell about it, but she won't. If she did, it would be to the Last West for Mr. Teeple.

I take notice that a man will tell pretty near all he knows, sooner or later, if you give him encouragement enough. He will blab things about the dining-room girl, and then walk off to the lodge and hold a tin sword to somebody's bosom and threaten him with sudden death if he doesn't keep a pollywog secret.

It's a good thing that the girls don't tell all they know about us. We run away with the idea that they don't keep secrets, as a matter of fact, every woman is a Keeper of Secrets (spell it with a big K and a large and noticeable S.)

Thee and me may be the biggest chums on earth, but something may divide us, and I take one side and thou the other, and we'll tell all we know. We'll like it all up—all the old, wretched things that should have been forgotten. Anything to win out.

But it's different with a woman. She won't tell. She will endure; she will survive you. She isn't as mean as you are. Of course, she may tell mean things about you—but she won't tell all!

I know what I am talking about when I say that a woman can keep a secret.

I looked down on her inscrutable face as she lay in her coffin this afternoon, and I said to myself: "This well for some folks in this neighborhood that you could keep a secret!"
