CHAPTER XXVII
"It will bump you to hear it, Georgiana, and I'm awfully sorry for you, but I can't help it," said Daisy, as one afternoon in October the two girls strolled about the campus; "I've got to tell you. You are laboring under the delusion that Kinross is in love with you—we can't of course, understand how he can help being, when he had the chance of watching us for four weeks without our knowing it. But," she added in the tone of an oracle, "he is not! Better you should know it now while none of your feelings except your pride are mixed up and before you hurt poor Gateshead to the point of driving him into my arms."

"How can you possibly know anything of Dr. Kinross's feelings, Daisy?" Georgiana asked. "He is not a man to flout them before the public. And I don't suppose he has taken you into his confidence?"

"Oh, but he has!" Georgiana turned and looked at her quickly. "What do you mean, Daisy?" "He is not a man to flout his feelings! Gracious, he can't repress himself! He just has to let out to every passerby!"

"And has he confided to you that he is not in love with me?" Georgiana smilingly inquired.

"He made me hear the whole story of Eunice—her turning out to be an heiress and the daughter of one of the oldest and best families in the country. Well, Georgiana, no man looks as he looked while speaking of that girl unless he has gone the way of all flesh and become mad with love. You would have seen it for yourself, but for your prepossession that he loved you. What a chance I missed myself, or if I'd dreamed that Pete was him—I mean he—I might have had a try at him myself, for I do like the creature rather. It isn't his fault that all the girls get silly about him. Yes," she said thoughtfully, "if I'd ever dreamed of his being himself I certainly would have given my attention to his case, for I know the man is rather fond of me—you may not have noticed it—and my own private opinion is that we were made for each other. No hope for any of us now, though, not even for you, Georgie. He's shelved! The long lost heiress has him. Whether he has her I don't know. I'd love to see him refused. I'd like to have a chance to refuse him myself. Though in such a contingency, if he continued to want me, I'd think about it. As for you, Georgiana, you'll have to content yourself with Gateshead."

Georgiana laughed. "Your gratuitous surmises, my dear, are all wrong. How could a man like Dr. Kinross care for a mere country girl like Eunice, a sort of servant to the farmer's family? She was a little less illiterate than the rest, but a simple, uneducated country girl nevertheless. Why, I never saw Dr. Kinross speak to her."

"He spoke to her whether we saw him or not."

"He is too clever a man and too fastidious to become enamored of an unsophisticated country girl." Georgiana repeated confidently. "The idea is absurd."

"He loves, adores, worships her!" Daisy affirmed. "He's mad about her. What, I ask, is more alluring to a world weary cynic than rural simplicity?"

"Rural simplicity," reasoned Georgiana, "is very well in its way. I think I don't underrate its value and its charm. But a highly complex mental and spiritual organism like that of Dr. Kinross could not be at one with a simple organism like that of the girl Eunice. It stands to reason."

"She was duplex or complex enough to land her fish!" Daisy vulgarly declared. "And to think, Georgiana, how you missed your chance when you had him all to yourself for a whole month—for, of course, I wasn't in the way."

"No doubt Dr. Kinross found my true self more quickly because of my unconsciousness of his presence than if we had come together in the ordinary way and been hampered by conventional forms and reserves."

"And maybe that's why he fell in love with Eunice instead of you."

"I don't follow your reasoning."

"Clear as mud! He found you too superior. Prefers rural simplicity. I ask you," she demanded, with a theatrical wave of her hand, "why he is now, at the very beginning of the term, away from college—in New York or Newport or some place? Echo answers, 'He's gone to see his girl!' Here comes your venerable young father!"

President Ellery, white haired and wrinkled, but vigorous, came toward them in the path, a cane in one hand, an open letter in the other.

"I have a letter from Dr. Kinross," he announced, waving it before them. "Bad news! He's resigned. But we shall not accept his resignation. We'll give him a year off and get his promise to return next fall—with his bride. He's about to be married and intends to spend a year in traveling with his wife in Europe and Asia."

"The unfortunate lady's name?" inquired Daisy, for Georgiana could not speak.

They waited breathless while President Ellery slowly took out his eyeglasses, adjusted them and examined the letter.

"Miss Eunice Wolcott," tottering. "Stung again!" cried Daisy, tottering.

The two girls walked on, while President Ellery proceeded in the opposite direction.

"Please, Georgie, don't let it rattle you," Daisy coaxed her, slipping her arm through her cousin's. "As I said in the beginning of my remarks to you this afternoon, none of your feelings is as yet engaged except your pride. Tell me," she demanded, with an air of conceit, "can I cure and cheer? Am I observant? Am I cute and clever? Are my perceptions keen? My parting advice to you is, be kind to Gateshead before it is yet too late and he saith in his heart, 'I have no pleasure in her.'"

Georgiana withdrew her arm from Daisy's. "I was mistaken in Dr. Kinross," she said, with dignity.

"So it would seem."

"He is, after all, commonplace. He was unworthy of the high friendship I gave him."

"If you want that, you must climb. He wasn't husky enough to do it."

"I had fancied him a man," said Georgiana, "to whom the low plane of the average marriage would be impossible, one whom the universe would call only to the highest union. But he was quite incapable of meeting me. A country girl's plunk and white prettiness—she shrugged her shoulders, leaving her remark unfinished.

"It only goes to show," said Daisy, "that there isn't the least use sporting up for a mere man, nor yet in making an effort. I don't really believe Eunice tried for Pete. After this I'm going to live up to my favorite motto, 'Let Things Slide.' You come out better in the end."

THE END.

Chesterfield Superficiality.
Chesterfield's idea of excellence was essentially superficial, for his praise of solid acquirement and genuine principle is always coupled with the assertion of their entire inutility if unaccompanied by grace, external polish and an agreeable manifestation. He omits all consideration of their intrinsic worth and absolute dignity. Their value to the individual, according to him, is wholly proportioned to his skill in using them in a social form.

In one of his earlier letters to Philip Stanhope he writes: "What an advantage has a graceful speaker with gentle motions, a handsome figure, over one who shall speak full as much good sense, but who is destitute of these ornaments! In business how prevalent are the graces, how detrimental is the want of them! All the rest will be of little use to you. By manners I mean engaging, insinuating, shining manners, a distinguished politeness, an almost irresistible address, a superior gracefulness in all you say and do." He would have manners overlay individuality and goes so far as to declare that a soldier is a brute, a scholar a pedant and a philosopher a cynic without good breeding.—London Standard.

Well,
To get the much prized candy;
It was a bag of ample size—
That met the wonder-sparkling eyes
Of little Nell and Andy.

Cheers were given for teacher dear,
Who grows in favor, year by year,
By kindly word and action.
The years will come and pass away,
Yet still we'll keep each Arbor Day,
In happy recollection.

Proper attention to the hair and scalp is the best preventive of baldness. An occasional application of Bearine Hair Pomade keeps the scalp in healthy condition. Mr. John Kelly has returned after a couple of weeks' visit in the West.

Mrs. Thos. Fluker and daughter, Miss Florence, are visiting friends in Toronto.

Barrister Grant, successor to W. F. Dunn, has arrived in town, and is doing business. Mr. Dunn left for Moosejaw, Sask.

Dr. and Mrs. Sinclair, of Woodstock, spent a week with Dr. and Mrs. Gun. They returned home on Wednesday.

Mr. Edgar, and sister, Miss Mary Edgar, of Stratford, visited over Sunday with Mr. and Mrs. Hildebrandt.

Mrs. Haddock, of Palmerston, visited her daughter, Mrs. Fluker, last week, and leaves at the end of this week for Vancouver, B. C.

Mr. Tom. McClocklin visited his home here on Tuesday, while passing through to Williamsford, on business.

Messrs. Arthur and Howard McDonald are in Raven Lake for a couple of weeks doing brickwork for the cement company there.

Mr. Neil McLean attended the funeral of his sister, Mrs. Hall, of Lloydtown, on Friday last.

Mr. Peter Ramage, and sister, Miss Ramage, spent a few days visiting friends in Egremont.

Mrs. Richard Hoy, of Flesherton, is at the bedside of her mother Mrs. Jos. Carwardine, who has been critically ill the past week.

Mr. Frank Irwin was present at the funeral of Mr. William Clayton in Flesherton on Monday last. Mr. Clayton was a tried and true friend of Ye Editor, who regrets very much to learn of his death. He was a resident of Flesherton for about fifty years.

Traverston.

Chas. McClocklin lost a good brood mare and foal on Friday of last week.

Mr. and Mrs. M. Black, of the Middaugh House, were out to their farm here on Arbor Day.

Rob. Hastie is away on a trip out West, and Miss Mary is home from Markdale to keep her mother company.

Mr. Joe Firth, of town, had a very neat and most befitting granite monument erected in his plot in Zion's Acre, last week.

Rev. Mr. Carter, of Varney, filled Zion's pulpit on Sunday. Ten years from now he will wonder how he ever preached such a pessimistic sermon.

Inspector Campbell paid his semi-annual visit to No. 5 last week. He had complimentary words for teacher and pupils, but trustees are always led to think of the 30th chapter of Proverbs, verse 15, as they read his report.

"King Edward dead!" Children told it to each other in awed whisper, grown up folk spoke as if each had lost a very near and dear friend. The poetical couplet very fittingly describe how he was regarded by his common subjects.

"He is gone, and forever the good fight is ended
A noble old chief in the last of his days."

ARBOR DAY IN NUMBER FIVE.
'Twas Arbor Day in Number Five
The school yard fairly was alive
With little lads and lasses.
Teacher, a maid with raven hair
Was busy hustling here and there,
Directing all the classes.

Some were sent to pick up stones,
Some to gather chips and bones
While others carried water;
Windows—received a double dashing,
Flowers got a generous splashing,
'Cause they thought they oughter.

The Secretary, on his knees,
Was firmly planting maple trees
And setting them a-plumb:
He thought of other days gone by
When other girls and boys did fly,
And made the day's work hum.

At tinkle of the noon-tide bell,
They rushed into the school, pell-
