Are You Subject to Colds?

Then don't load your stomach with cough syrups. Send healing mediation through the nostrils—send it into the passages that are subject to colds and catarrh. Easy to do this with Catarrhzone, which cures a cold in ten minutes, even to the lungs goes the healing vapor of Catarrhzone—all through the bronchial tubes, nostrils and air passages—everywhere a trace of disease remains will Catarrhzone follow. You'll not have colds nor will you suffer from sniffles, bronchitis or throat trouble if Catarrhzone is used. Get it today. 25 cents and $1.00 at all dealers.

Miss Minnie Burnett returned to Toronto on Thursday.

To Move Off a Cold.
Cough mixtures "dope" a cold—but don't cure. Above all else, keep the bowels regular and stimulate the eliminating organs. More valuable than any cough syrup are Dr. Hamilton's Pills. They clear the system of every trace of cold—the dull headache, aching limbs, and cough disappears. Take the pills before retiring, they work while you sleep and by morning your cold is broken and passes quickly away. All dealers sell Dr. Hamilton's Pills in 25 ct. boxes.

At 2:45 p.m. Monday, Miss Martha Lawrence is a little easier, but is very weak, by far too weak to undergo an operation. This we learned by a personal interview with a member of the family.

The teacher and pupils of No. 9 were a busy bunch on Friday last, as they were cleaning up the grounds and giving things in general an overhauling. All the while the Union Jack floated proudly from the flagstaff. Eleven maple trees now adorn the grounds.

Mrs. John Hewitt, mother of the writer, whom we reported a couple of weeks ago as improving, has again taken to her bed, this time sluggish action of the liver is the cause of the trouble. However, her chances are good for a complete recovery. Owing to relatives and friends who read the Chronicle, we insert this item.

Mr. James Atkinson is at present digging a ditch from his barn to a ditch leading from his barn to a spring some distance away. His idea is to put in pipes and install a system of water works in his stables, and also his piggery. Jim intends to have things so handy that the pigs will almost be able to help themselves.

Concerning those afflicted with illness in this locality. Miss Martha Lawrence, we regret to learn, is seriously ill since last writing. Prayers were offered in Trinity church last Sunday evening, for her recovery, and we trust they will be answered.

A shock was felt by the people of the civilised world, but more keenly by the people of the British Empire, when on Saturday last the startling message flashed throughout the land from across the Atlantic, that King Edward, the seventh had passed away to the Great Beyond, and the life of one of the greatest and noblest rulers which ever sat on the throne of England, or wore the crown, which has been handed down through generations of Royalty had been extinguished. Many are the tributes paid to his memory, and let us trust that the present proclaimed King—George the Fifth—may prove as good a ruler as his predecessor—King Edward—has been. Sadness is universal.

OUR NEW SOVEREIGN

George the Fifth is a Brilliant and Promising Ruler.

The Popularity of the New King of Great Britain and Ireland and Emperor of India Has Been Assured For Years, and His Future Should Be Splendid—His Wife is the Cleverest of the English Princesses.

The people of Great Britain are to be congratulated on their good fortune in possessing at a critical moment of the dynastic succession a man who can command their entire confidence and respect. The British populace have watched with an anxiety no one not a Briton could understand the increase of the royal family by birth and its decimation by death until all their hopes have been centered upon the man who stood next in succession to Edward VII. and who, with a mere change of title, would become "of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland and of the British dominions beyond the sea, King, Defender of the Faith, Emperor of India," and until assumption of the kingly office latterly known as George Frederick Ernest Albert, Prince of Wales, etc.

Since the death of his elder brother, the Duke of Clarence, George has been the cynosure of all eyes within the confines of Great Britain and his every movement has been watched with intense solicitude. Of the six children born to King Edward and Queen Alexandra when they were, respectively, Prince and Princess of Wales, one boy died at childbirth, and the eldest, the Duke of Clarence, died in January, 1892, leaving three daughters and the second son.

Prince George, after the death of his elder brother, his presumptive heir and after the death of Queen Victoria her apparent to the throne, was born at Marlborough House, London, June 3, 1895, only seventeen months after the Duke of Clarence, and was christened at Windsor the month following. From his earliest years destined for the navy as well as preferring it from inclination, George was entered as a cadet on board H.M.S. Britannia at Dartmouth when eleven years of age, and in 1870 he and his brother began a cruise around the world in the Bacchante. The schooling of the young princes went on while they were voyaging, and in 1889 both were rated as midshipmen, the event being celebrated by their shipmates in a minstrel performance.

After their return the two brothers were confirmed by Archbishop Tait, who in his remarks on the occasion set forth the difficult duties of a sovereign, in the last address of the kind he ever delivered. "It would be presumptuous to prophesy," he said, "what may be the duties or the difficulties of a future King of England. From this time forward your course of life, which has hitherto been unusually alike, must in many respects diverge. You will have different occupations and different training for an expected difference of position. But brothers united by a true affection may do much to help each other in all difficulties, though their streams of life may flow apart."

The words of the worthy archbishop did not prove prophetic, as recent history has shown, for by the death of Clarence "Sailor Prince" George not only stepped into the succession, but was finally married, on July 6, 1893, to Princess Victoria May of Teck, to whom his brother had been affianced less than three years before. The wedding took place at the Chapel Royal, St. James, the Duke of York wearing the uniform of captain in the royal navy and being supported by his father, the Prince of Wales, and his uncle, the Duke of Edinburgh.

Four children have been born to the royal couple, the heir apparent being Edward Albert Christian George Patrick David, whose birth occurred at White Lodge on June 23, 1894. The three others in sequence are: Albert Frederick Arthur George, born Dec. 14, 1895; Victoria Alexandra Alice Mary, April 25, 1897, and Henry William Frederick Albert, March 31, 1900. Little Prince Edward, the heir apparent to the throne, has already manifested a decided inclination for military life and is considered precocious beyond his years.

Popular Always.
In January, 1901, the then Duke of York was promoted to the rank of rear admiral in Her Majesty's fleet in anticipation of his proposed departure on the long cruise around the world in the Ophir, which terminated only a few months ago. The thousands of beautiful gifts received on that eventful and in many respects wonderful voyage were still on exhibition when King Edward was stricken with his malady and afford a sad commentary upon the futility of fame.

These gifts not only evidenced the loyalty of the colonists, but were in many instances tributes to the great popularity of the Prince throughout his career. Even when his brother, then heir presumptive to the throne, was alive England's "sailor prince" was more in favor than the Duke of Clarence, and indeed his disposition was altogether different. He has the reputation of having been rather gay when popularly supposed to be sober, though Sailor George was at times a bit wild and boisterous, he was never dissipated to the extent related of some of his ancestors in the male line. Since his marriage he has won the respect of all classes by his dignified and sedate bearing on all public occasions, while his private life has been exemplary. In fact, England may surely be congratulated upon the manner of man she had in reserve for the royal succession, and, judging from the past, his future career will be an honor and credit to the land over which he has been called to reign.

Ends Life by Gas.
Toronto, May 7.—William McKee, 52 years of age, a bricklayer, who has been living alone in a little house at 139 Clisbe avenue, was found dead in his bed yesterday afternoon.

EUROPE'S PEACEMAKER

King Edward Followed Out Mother's Ideal.

Britain's Well-Beloved Sovereign a Gentleman, a Patron of the Statesman, a Sportsman, an anthropologist and a Diplomat of passing Ability—His Efforts Saved the Peace of Europe.

King Edward the Seventh, or as will be known in history "The Peacemaker of Europe," who has after a reign of nine years and months, was sixty-nine years old, having been born Nov. 9, 1864, at Buckingham Palace. For half a century he has been perhaps the most prominent royal figure in Europe as scholar, diplomat, sportsman and gentleman. As eldest son of the ruling sovereign he became at the moment of the Duke of Cornwall, thereby being entitled to the revenues of the year. At four weeks of age he came Prince of Wales and Duke of Chester by royal patent, titles which he received at the Duke of Rothesay, and Duke of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha, Prince of Saxony of Carrick, Earl of Innes, Marquis of Frew, and Lord of the Isles.

He took his first name from his father the Prince of Wales, the second one, Edward, from his father, the Duke of Kent, and the mother's wish that he should be crowned Albert I., but England predilection for the old name he became Edward VII.

His birth was a great day for the land, for it meant that the throne would be first in the world is better off for his Queen's eldest son, the future King of England, was an event of pressiveness. The ceremony on Jan. 25, 1842, in St. Chapel, Windsor. The royal Duke of Saxe-Coburg, represented the Duchess of Kent; the Duke of Cambridge, the young Duke of Saxe-Coburg, Prince of Saxony, Ferdinand of Saxe-Coburg.

The prince's first trainer for the direction of Lady Lister, sister of Mrs. Gladstone, governess to the royal children, the prince was six years of age of seven his education under the tutelage of Rev. Alfred Birch, who retired from the profession in 1851.

The next tutor under tutelage the young prince came under the tutelage of the Rev. W. W. Gibbs, who remained in Edinburgh to pursue under a number of professions.

First Public Appearance. His earliest appearance part on any public occasion was at the laying of the stone of the Lambeth School, Vauxhall. After the death of his mother, the prince became the most desirable man at all ceremonies in a public or charitable undertaking to be recognized by the King occupied a large position and was always present, dignified, tact and patience no prince of any country personally exerted himself fully to render services to the community. The variety of his engagements of local and special nature a surprising list and involved a sacrifice of ease which few men of high care to make.

Among the members of the family the late King was from his childhood. He was him by that name; his name in his diary long grown to manhood an father of a large family of him Bertie to the day. But no outsider, however dared address him. The prince's youthful much like those of youngsters of less distinction in 1853 he suffered from the measles, and the
