You pretty stenographer, a prince who is musical and profligate and a horde of fanatical Moslems who will inherit the riches of Japat provided the heirs do not marry each other - these are the leading characters in a romance which for genuine novelty, thrilling and unusual situations, live American humor and the pathos of a great but apparently hopeless love has rarely been equaled and never surpassed.

CHAPTER L THE LATE MR. SKAGGS. HE death of Taswell Skaggs was stimulating, to say the least, inapplicable though the expression may seem. He attained Co. circular,: W.K Thompson, re the end of a hale old age by tumbling aimlessly into the mouth of a crater on the island of Japat, somewhere in the mysterious south seas. The world had quite thoroughly forgotten him during erly executed deed by the late the twenty odd years immediately pre-John McCormick and wife, of the ceding his death. It was, however, deviation on lot 28. con. 2, EG.R, noticeably worth while to remember This document was found where it him at this particular time. He left had lain snugly for forty-eight a last will and testament that bade years in the cash box of the late fair to distress as well as startle a great many people on both sides of the Atlantic. In Boston the law firm of Bowen & Hare was puzzling itself beyond reason in the effort to anticipate and circumvent the plans of the firm of Bosworth, Newnes & Grapewin, London, E. C., while on the other side of the Atlantic Messrs. Bosworth, Newnes & Grape. win were blindly struggling to do precisely the same thing in relation to

"Pretty badly tangled, I declare," said Mr. Hare, staring helplessly at his senior partner.

"Hopelessly," agreed Mr. Bowen, cil purchase four slush scrapers, very much as if he had at first intend-

Before them on the table lay the contents of a bulky envelope, a long and stupendous letter from their London correspondents and with it a copy of day of ten hours, or twenty cents cently had been named as joint executhe privilege of appointing some A long and exasperating cablegram had touched somewhat irresolutely upon the terms of the will, besides notifying him that one of the heirs resided in Boston. He was instructed to apprise this young man of his good fortupe.

There was one very important, perhaps imposing, feature in connection with the old gentleman's will-he was The council adjourned to June decidedly sound of mind and body

When such astute lawyers as Bowen & Hare give up to amazement, the usual forerunner of consternation, it is high time to regard the case as star-

"Read it again, Bowen." "No; the letter."

Whereupon Mr. Bowen again read

"They seem as much upset by the

"Extraordinary state of affairs, must say.". "And I don't know what to do about it. I don't even know how to begin.

They're both married." "And not to each other." "She's the wife of a Lord knows what of a lord, and he's married to an uncommonly fine girl, they say, notwithstanding the fact that she have larger social aspirations than be has

"And if that all important clause in the will is not carried out to the letter the whole fortune goes to the bowwows."

"Practically the same thing. calls them 'natives:' that's all. looks to me as though the bowwows the old man's millions.

first place, Skaggs was not an intimate friend of mine. I met him in Constantinople five years ago and afterward handled some business for him that they are already married, in New York. He had no right to by and then turn your troubles over to the natives. Young Browne can't marry Miss Ruthven inside of a year simply because there is no Miss Ruthven. She's Lady-Lady-what's the name?"

"Deppingham." "And Browne already has one Mrs. Browne to his credit, don't you see. Well, that settles it, I'd say. It's hardly probable that Browne will murder or divorce his wife, nor is it likely that her ladyship would have the courage to dispose of her incumbrance in either way on such short notice." "But it means millions to them,

"That's their unfortunate lookout.

You are to act as an executor, not as a matrimonial agent." "But, man, it's an outrage to give all of it to those wretched islanders. Bosworth says that rubies and sapphires grow there like mushrooms."

"Bosworth also says that the islanders are thrifty, intelligent and will fight for their rights. There are lawyers among them, he says, as well as jewel diggers and fishermen." "Skaggs and Lady Deppingham's grandfather were the only white men who ever lived there long enough to find out what the island had stored up for civilization. That's why they bought it outright, but I'm hanged if I can see why he wants to give it back to the

"Perhaps he owes it to them. He doubtless bought it for a song, and, contrary to all human belief, he may have resurrected a conscience. Anyhow, there remains a chance for the heirs to break the will."

"It can't be done, Hare; it can't be done. It's as clean an instrument as ever survived a man." It is by this time safe for the reader to assume that Mr. Taswell Skaggs had been a rich man and therefore privileged to be eccentric. He came of a sound old country family in upper England, but seems to have married a | G. T. Bell, bit above his station. His wife was serving as governess in the home of a cer tain earl when Taswell won her heart and dragged her from the exalted position of minding other people's children into the less conspicuous one of caring for her own.

Their only son was killed by a runaway horse when he was twenty, and their daughter became the wife of an American named Browne when she was scarcely out of her teens. It was then that Mr. Skaggs, practically childless, determined to make himself wife-He magnanimously deeded the unentailed farm to his wife, turned his securities into cash and then set forth upon a voyage of exploration. It is common history that upon one dark, still night in December he said goodby forever to the farm and its mistress, R. MACFARLANE, - Town Agent, but it is doubtful if either of them heard him. To be "jolly well even" with him

Mrs. Skaggs did a most priggish thing. She died six months later, but before doing so she made a will in which she left the entire estate to her daughter. effectually depriving the absent busband of any chance to reclaim his Taswell Skaggs was in Shanghai when he heard the news. It was on a Friday. His informant was that erstwhile friend Jack Wyckholme. Naturally Skaggs felt deeply aggrieved with the fate which permitted him to capitulate when unconditional surrender was so close at hand. His language for one brief quarter of an hour did more to upset the progress of Christian endeavor in the far east than all the idols in the Chinese empire.

"There's nawthin' in England for me, Jackie. My gal's a bloomin' foreigner by this time, and she'll sell the bleeding farm, of course. She's an American, God bless 'er 'eart. I dare say if I'd go to 'er and say I'd like my farm back again she'd want to fork hover, but 'er usband wouldn't be for that sort of hextravagance. 'E'd boot me off the hisland."

"The United States isn't an island, Tazzy," explained Mr. Wyckholme. gulping his brandy and soda. Mr. Wyckholme was the second son of Sir Somebody-or-other and had married the vicar's, daughter. This put him into such bad odor with his famlly that he hurried off to the dogs-and a goodly sized menagerie besides if the
