in hunting against the wind in open forests more game is passed than many hunters would suppose. The animals see the man, note that he will pass them and hide by getting as near to the ground as possible. If they scent him after he has passed they evidently realize that the danger is over, though some, mostly the younger, mexperienced animals, then sneak off. Where game is very wild it is often in such localities as I have mentioned only possible to approach them with the wind by outdistancing the latter, because a big game animal at rest de-The annual installation of officers pends on its nose to save it from danger in the direction from which the wind comes and on its eyes to watch the side from which it can get no other warning .- "Track and Tracking," by Stephen Phillips, the dramatist and poet, began life as a member of F. R. Benson's repertoire company. An amusing story is told of his debut. Mr. Benson had told him that the great thing for an actor is to act. "It does not matter," he continued, "so much what the words are which the actor speaks as the impression which he conveys to the audience by those words." Then be gave Mr. Phillips the part of Balthazar in "Romeo and Juliet." On the first night Balthazar managed the a purse of $10.00 which was won by the rest. Romeo, in the person of Mr. the team from here, the score being Benson, had to go to his assistance and speak the rest of the part for him, Artemesia Orangemen decided at while Balthazar exhibited an agony of going on the stage without knowing your part?"
