LETTER TO THE EDITOR.

Mr. Editor,
Dear Sir,—It seems the fun over the pigs and pig pens has not yet come to an end. Mr. Calder, in your last issue having again stirred up the dirt by telling you that I had sense enough this time to sign my name "R. Cochrane," instead of "Pig Lover," or "Lover of Pigs." It was too bad of Mr.
Calder to cut the sentences in two,
He should have given it a rest.
It, "a lover of pigs, and British fair play." You see, in that way, how much nicer it would have looked.
If Mr. Calder was as fond of British fair play as I am of pigs, what a deal less trouble the town of Durham would have with him. He goes on to tell you that my letter would convey to him the impression that some love-sick youth of ten years had written it. Oh Calder! The devil forgive ye for lea-ring, for leering, the devil forgive ye for leering.

The letter never conveyed to you any such impression, as both town and country people say it was the best production that has yet appeared on the piggy question.
He again goes on to tell you that my advisors are perhaps the parties who are responsible for the effusions which have appeared in it. Another awful big lie, and when you see Laidlaw, McLachlan Cochrane in some corner with their noses glued together, look out for squalls. The squalls are to appear the following week in the shape of a letter signed "R.
Cochrane," or "Pig Lover," or "Lover of Pigs." Now, Mr. Editor, I cannot deny but it is the truth, this time, and it was the first time we were ever in the position he speaks of. How Mr. Calder came to see us is the mystery. I think he must have been eavesdropping, and now when the pig is out of the poke, I may just as well make a breach of it, and tell you what the three noses were glued together for. Alex. noticed a pig in the distance, although I don't think it was near as far away as Peter Paterson's house is from the pen, the wind was favorable. Alex. says to me, "Bob, do you see yonder hog? He must have lapped out of the wagon.
Can you smell him from here?" I sniffed a bit, and said I could not. "Can you, Mr. Mayo?" He sniffed too, and says, "No, I can't smell him." Then says the Mayor, "three noses are better than one. Let us put them together and try again." So together they went. The result the same—no smell. Then we spoke one to another, and reasoned like this—If the noses of Calder, Paterson Smith & Co. are put in the same position that ours were, they can't smell the hog at that distance any more than we can.

He again tells you that in my last letter I accuse him of being a supporter of the motion to buy the market lot, and goes on to say that I had no right to make any such assertion. The Mayor, the Clerk and all the Councillors I have spoken to say he did. At the public meeting in the hall a few nights ago the question I put to him was this: "Were you not a supporter of the motion to buy the McKechnie lot, and did you not know said lot was bought for the express purpose of building the market house now?" Did he deny it? No. Instead, he wri-gled around like an eel in a mud-hole, and took his seat. A few days after, what do we find? Mr.
Calder moving heaven and earth to kill the By-law, and if the truth was known, had a finger in the pie regarding the locking of the door and the driving of the contractors from the erection of it, as he should have done. He sort of held the lash over our heads, told us if the building was gone on with, might create a lawsuit, and entail heavy damages against the town. That, Mr. Mayor, is the only reason I had in meddling in the business. We have taxes enough to pay without being roped in for, as Calder predicted, heavy law expenses, through the stupidity of a few crazy eaves who imagined they were going to be choked to death from the smell of the hog, and him nearly a quarter of a mile from their own doorstep. The chances are that the same people would get more scent from their own back yard or closet, in ten minutes, than they would get from the pig in a lifetime.

Now, Mr. Editor, I have got my faults and failings, like everyone else, but I don't remember of ever being claimed as cowardly, but just at present, I must own up to something of that kind. I am getting just a little snaky.
The other night, one of our business men touched me on the shoulder. "Bob," he says, "Calder is going to knock you into a cocked hat." "Nonsense," says I, "he and I have always been the best of friends, and we are going to remain such." Along comes another and says, "If I just had the power I would put him where he wouldn't hurt you." "Where," I said, "would you put him?" "In the pen, and feed him on husks."
"Then, my dear sir," I said to him, "I hope you will never have the power, for there would be no fun in this town without him, and we don't want him penned up." Strange to say, along comes the third man and sticks in his gall.
Says he, "You may say about him as the farm servant said about the pig. The boss said to him, "Jack, have you seen the old sow lately?" "Yes," says Jack, "she is behind the barn studying deviltry." Now friend Calder, when you write again, give us some news.
Pigs and Lover of Pigs have become stale. I work on the builders again at the pen, Smith & Co. locked up. Just begin your letter by telling us what it has cost the firm to open it. By doing so, you will oblige, Yours truly,
R. COCHRANE.
