CHRONICLES OF THE KHAN. THE BLISTER. MEN. Some men have the talent, some men have the gall, Some have too much money, some have none at all, Some men are good looking, many men are not, Every man thinks some man has a happier lot. Some men work for glory, some for daily bread, Some men keep slipping backward, Some men deem their honor, of all dear things the first, Some men think the best thing 's a constant thirst. Some men sit in darkness, some achieve the heights, Some men's wives are beauties, some men's wives are frights, Some men have useful knowledge all their lives pursue, Caring not for riches—they are mighty few. Some men live to lighten other people's woes, Some men live to plunder, some men live to pose, Some men have the talent, some men have the gall, Each man thinks his hardships heaviest of all. —S. E. Kiser.

John Henry Augustus Sufferen Moses is a young gentleman who is trying to get through the university. He is somewhat short of funds and it was intimated to him that he could get a dollar and a half a day during haying and harvest working for the farmers, and he could start out on the winter term with a wad that would be a material help. Somebody loaded him on to Old Twilight's democrat last Saturday, and he sat on a hundred of sugar to put him in the bride chamber, but she was overruled. On the way up, he harped continually on the presence of so many Leucanthemum vulgare in the fields and along the roadside. Old Twilight thought perhaps it was ground-hogs he meant, but did not commit himself, and when he finally discovered that it was oxeys daisies he was plumb disgusted. But Aunt Lucy, good soul, thought it was too bad to have so great a man riding with his back to the horses, with his carpet bag. (as she insists on calling it) between his knees. There is an old carpet bag hanging on the wall in the Wigwam, that belonged to my great-grandmother. A carpet bag was what it said it was—a carpet bag. It was made out of carpet stuff, and it was the suitcase, the satchel, the valise of the olden times.

Next morning, while the grass was drying off, Old Twilight took him off to hoe corn in the rush-bottom lot, and in half an hour he developed a blister on his left white hand. That settled it—J.H. Miller. He hath gone away and he isn't worth talking about. The young soldier of the Lord starts out with high aims to battle for the Cross, and he gets a blister on his heel, or his thumb, and he goes away back and sits down. We are told that Caesar crossed the Rubicon. This may be an allegory. Caesar may have had a blister between his great toe and its next neighbor, but he grinned and bore it, he pushed on, he wouldn't let a little blister on his toes check his splendid career. He that overcometh is the man who keeps on hoeing in spite of the first blister.

Our new story "The Pillar of Light," commences next week. It is a good story, and well worth reading.

wish I had all the money that has been in that old carpet bag. I wouldn't call the King my uncle. And if I had all the ham sandwiches, and cold chicken and pigs' feet and doughnuts and cookies that it has contained in its time, I could picnic a bigger crowd than Borden plus Doherty could scare up in a month of Sundays. But let us go back to Sufferen Moses. When I get talking about something good to eat, I don't know when to quit. Well, they unloaded him at the barn. He put in one royal Sunday anyhow. He will never have another like it. The table was laid on the lawn among the hollyhocks, and he was fed as high as if he were president of the conference. Aunt Lucy had an impression that every well-dressed person with a stand-up collar and white hands must be good. In her strenuous, early days, the only visitors to the old homestead in the clearing who were invariably well-dressed, and whose hands were soft and white, were the preachers and the missionaries. And she has always associated good clothes and industry from work with the catechism, tracts, learning so many verses off by heart, evening prayer and the spare bed.

So I do not wonder when the evening had come and the day was far spent, she brought the old family Bible, and Sufferen Moses read us the chapter where Ruth gleaned in the barley fields and he gave us quite a spiel as to how we were all gleaners in the Lord's harvest field, and that we should all hump ourselves and get busy, for the night cometh when no man can work, and so forth.
