A LIVE CITY.

Hanover Is One of the Most Progressive Cities of Europ..

One of the most progressive and up-to-date cities of Europe is Hanover. It is full of interest to the tourist and its citizens are noted especially for their energy. For rapid progress it more closely resembles American cities than any other city on the continent. William E. Curtis, of The Chicago Record-Herald, writes very interestingly concerning this German city. Among other things he

Although it is so old and in several respects so antiquated, Hanover is one of the most enterprising cities in Germany, and is growing as rapidly as some of the boomed cities of Amer. ica. The population in 1840 was 27,-000, in 1850 it was 49,909, in 1880 it was 106,667, in 1900 it was 266,753 inhabitants, an increase of 33,000 during the last 10 years, or an average of 3,000 a year. Most of the newcomers are from the country districts, being attracted to the city by its commercial and industrial advantages. Almost every industry is represented among the factories, and the energy and enterprise of the population has been recognized for a hundred years. Hanover was the first town in Europe to use gas; it was one of the first to use electricity; it was the second to run street cars, and the second to adopt asphaltum for pavements. The business section of the city is built up closely with fine large blocks of modern buildings. The residence portion will compare favorably with any other city in Germany, but it is a question whether the people are prouder of the modern palaces and the broad streets upon which they stand or the old part of the city, with its antiquated architecture and its narrow, crooked, lanelike thoroughfares. In the old town you can see where the ford was from which the city derived its name. Six highways running from different parts of Germany concentrated at a shallow place in the Leine river, the FFICE, TELFORD'S BLOCK. UP Hohen Ufer, as it was called, a LOT GORE A, EGREMONT, 55 AC- () stairs, Lambton Street. Residence- phrase that was gradually corrupted into Hanover.

ELECTION ADDRESSES.

British Annals Are Full of Striking

Pronouncements.

At one time it was customary to address long and flowery communications to the electors, calling attention to past services and setting forth the candidate's opinions in detail. A member of the Lyttelton family, in an address about a century ago, asserted, "I have discharged my duty without fear or favor, resisting equally the undue influence of the crown and the machinations of turbulent sedition," a reference to the monarchy which would not be tolerated in these days. The longest address of recent years was issued by a West Country candidate; it ran into more than 4,000 the famous one issued to the electors of Birkenhead by Sir Elliott Lees. It toria," cabled from Pretoria, where he was serving with the Yeomanry. An oft-quoted address was that issued by a candidate at Merthyr Tydfil ten years ago. It was said that the gentleman had it printed in Cardiff by mistake, being under the impression he was in the constituency for which he was to stand. "I have lived, loved, and married," he told the electors; "owned children and houses; experienced the world, the flesh, and the devil; made and lost, and made and explored; mined, distilled, manufactured, built, lent, borrowed, bought, and sold."

For really weird election addresses one must go to the thousands of men who aspire to the modest honor of local councillor. A year ago a Christian Socialist tailor came forward at English Nobility Has Done Pretty Leicester, and it is pathetic to think that his really gorgeous address only brought him fourteen votes.

He began by asking the electors of his ward to "anoint their eyes with Or else myself were only something the spittle of love, and wipe them clean with the napkin of righteousquote in full, but its import was that every worker was to have a fixed wage of $15 per week, "with free travel and all rent and taxation ended." It was thus that the new King of No one is to work more than five Siam, who was educated in England, hours a day, and retire from active

It was a Hibernian candidate who stated: "My posterity belonging to one of the most famous Irish families and myself being a man of unassailable integrity, of clear intelligence, and of exhaustive will-power, I will do my utmost for our prehistoric town."

Students Cheer for Liberty.

The Khedive of Egypt was unpleasantly impressed recently by a demonstration which occurred at Tanta, 50 miles north of Cairo, as his highness halted there on his way home from Alexandra.

A number of students of the secondary school shouted, "Long live the constitution! Long live the constitutional Egypt!" thus indicating that they were only ready to cheer the khedive when parliamentary rule is continued to all arrears are paid, except at the established there.
