The flies that are now in your kitchen and dining room were probably feasting on some indescribable nastiness less than an hour ago, and as a single fly often carries many thousands of disease germs attached to its hairy body, it is the duty of every housekeeper to assist in exterminating this worst enemy of the human race.

WILSON'S FLY PADS Kill flies in such immense quantities as cannot be approached by any other fly killer.

The Burgsville Club.

John Sanderson and Cam. Glenville had been bad friends since the tree had fallen across the line fence and broken a few rails, which both said would never be replaced. "If he had anything to do with it," John was sure that he would not replace them, and Cam. was equally sure that he would not. Thus had matters stood between them for some years. The rails were never replaced and the cows were always getting into each other's crops, but each would have driven the cows home a hundred times rather than give in to the other.

It was at this stage of the fight that the Farmer's Club was organized in the district. This club was to show that good feelings should exist between all the neighbors, and that each should be willing to pass any good thing along. The club tried to get all the farmers in the settlement to think alike and to practise the best methods of farming so that all would be able to make good money and so that the values of the farms in that locality would increase in value rapidly. That the last meeting of the season was the one at which the "friction" was to come was not expected by anyone. It came just as sure as storms and "liars" come into the House of Commons at Ottawa.

The subject to be discussed was the growing of cucumbers, citrons, melons, and all kinds of vine fruits of this nature. The discussion would have been a good one, but there was only one kind of crop discussed, as we will see later. The settlement had worked up a fairly good name in this line, and it was thought that a discussion of this topic would bring out some ideas that would be a benefit to all. In opening the meeting, President Phil Jarvis said:

PRESIDENT GIVES ADVICE. "Gents.—For a few year's back, we've had pretty good times, an' the time has come when we should try to make every blooming thing in this section look the same. Some of us have been trying to grow cowcumbers, and have been shippin' to the pickle factories stuff that should have been fed to the pigs, only the pigs wouldn't eat them. Now this here meetin' is to try an' git the people all to do the growin' in the same way so that we can grow cowcumbers that will all be the same and so that we can git more money by havin' them even. The buyers all say that if we had an even lot of cowcumbers we would git more for them. Then too, we should ship in one lot and save freight. The company too would have fewer accounts to keep an' one of us would be able to handle the money at this end of the line and thus save the costs at the other end, which we have to pay now for book-keepin'." I do not grow any of these here cowcumbers, and I will give the floor to someone who does. Mr. Cam. Glenville, will you tell us how you grow yours?"

Cam. was noted as a man who liked to be called upon to express his opinions in public, and it gave him great satisfaction to be the first called on at this time. Clearing his throat with a loud "Ahem!" he started:—"Mister Chairman, and Gentlemen,—I believe that I had the best cucumbers that were grown in this section last year. They were the best for I got the highest price for them and if I got that from T. Thomas, for the pickle factory, you may be sure they were the best or I would not have got it. Now, I grew mine in this manner. I gave the soil a liberal dose of manure from the barnyard, and worked the soil till the Missus said the life was all worked out of it. Then I made little hills about three feet apart and sowed five seeds in each hill. Before I sowed the seeds I put a little manure in each hill, and this is what made them grow so well.

"I would rather pay eight cents for a crack at his woolly empty head," muttered Cam.

The boot was returned by the doorkeeper, who said with a grin, "I had a hard time to get the shoe. When I got out there, I found two fine young people courtin', and I had to make a noise so that they would hear me. But they didn't, and I saw Mary Sanderson sittin' on Tom Glenville's knee and they were havin' a nice courtin'." I can tell you. And to think that their dads were fightin' just above their heads," gurgled the little man, at which the whole meeting broke into loud laughter. When this had subsided the President called on Jack to tell how he grew his "cowcumbers."

JACK HAS HIS SAY. "Men," began Jack. "I don't know whether I got more than my friends did or not but I do know that I had the most and the best cucumbers on the line. I got the soil ready as I would for roots, and then filled a barrel with well rotted manure. This barrel I sat into the ground about three inches. Before I sat it into the ground, I bored holes into the sides of it near the bottom. I sowed the seeds about a foot from the barrel, and about a foot apart, one seed in a place. Then whenever it became dry and sometimes when it wasn't dry, I would put two or three pails of water into the barrel in the evening and this would wash the manure and take the good out of it into the soil where the roots were. That is how I did it, and not as my friend the enemy says."

For a moment it looked as if there was to be another scrap. Cam. was again pulling at his long boot. Those near him kept him in his place, and would not allow him to make another break in the meeting. When he saw he could not get his boot off in time to hit Jack before he sat down he jumped to his feet and shouted across the hall at him, "Now take your medicine will you? You called me a liar a little while ago. Now it's my turn. You're a liar,—a complete confirmed liar." His black eyes gleamed as he said it. Just at this moment Tom, his

That is all I did to them, and they grew tip-top. Now Jack Sanderson he did not do that."

At the mention of his name by Cam. Glenville, Jack sat straight in his seat and paid attention to what was being said.

"He sowed some of his like I did mine, but he thinned the seeds to three in a hill after they grew and then he gave them some manure water from the yard whenever the rain did not come thick enough to make good growth. The other lot were sowed in rows as you would sow your turnmuts. He did not give them any extra manure nor did he give them any water. He used them like he would a crop of turnmuts. These were no good."

Everyone was enjoying the talk, and the interest was good, when Jack jumped to his feet, white with rage, and yelled, "You're a liar!"

FIRED AT THE ENEMY.

Cam. had been called a liar but once before, and the fellow was so sore and so sorry that he never would go near Cam. again. The calling of the name at this time made Cam. think and act rapidly. He sat down, pulled off one boot, and hurled it at Jack with all his might. If he had not used so much force he might have hit his enemy, but as it was the boot did no more damage than to go through the window and land in Mary Sanderson's lap. It would have struck Tom Glenville on the knee had not Mary been between him and the boot. This was perfectly right for it was yet only nine o'clock.

"Mister Chairman," shouted Jack, "I appeal to you to try and make that liar shut his mouth. He has done nothing but tell lies on me since he started, and I will not allow it."

"Shut up your head," called back Cam. "You called me a liar, and by the—"

But the threat was lost in cries of "Order." It was a long time before the President could make his little voice heard, but when he did, he said, "Men, I thought it was bad enough for Irishmen to be fightin' but when it comes to an Englishman and a Scotchman, then it is too far. It is worse still when it is two Scotchmen. If you want to have it out get on your kilties and go for it with a pair of broomsticks. Meantime put up your swords and send the doorkeeper after the shoe that Cam. broke the window with. It will cost him eight cents to pay for the pain of glass."

"I would rather pay eight cents for a crack at his woolly empty head," muttered Cam.

The boot was returned by the doorkeeper, who said with a grin, "I had a hard time to get the shoe. When I got out there, I found two fine young people courtin', and I had to make a noise so that they would hear me. But they didn't, and I saw Mary Sanderson sittin' on Tom Glenville's knee and they were havin' a nice courtin'." I can tell you. And to think that their dads were fightin' just above their heads," gurgled the little man, at which the whole meeting broke into loud laughter. When this had subsided the President called on Jack to tell how he grew his "cowcumbers."

son, and Mary Sanderson, walked into the meeting arm in arm. They had waited till their fathers had become interested in the meeting and had gone to the minister's and got married. They knew that the ceremonies had to be done when their parents knew nothing about it, or they would never be performed. All eyes turned to the visitors. Tom's father was still at fever heat. Turning to the young couple, he shouted, "What fool notion does this mean?"

"Simply that Mary and I have gone and got married and we thought we would come here and tell you so that the people could save us from further torment for we have had enough of it," quietly answered the son.

At this the members of the club roared. They had just witnessed the fight between the fathers, and were in the proper mood to enjoy the scene which they knew should happen. Jack was the first to gather his senses. Leaving his seat, he made straight for the young couple. Club members held their breath to see what he would do. He, knowing that all were watching him, quietly said, "I like your courage. May you both be happy and be able to grow better cucumbers than either of your parents."

Then he went over and shook hands with Cam, amidst the applause and laughter of the Club members. The line fence was fixed shortly after.

WESTERN FAIR.

All Canada, particularly the Province of Ontario, has a warm place in its heart for the Western Fair, partly because it is the pioneer big annual exhibition of the Dominion, and has set a pace for other shows of a similar character, but mainly for the reason that it is always a good fair, that it lives up to its advertising and can be relied on, no matter what others are found wanting. That this year's Western Fair, to be held in London, September 8th to 16th will surpass in every respect all others of the past, there is every reason to believe. For the Directors have been at work harder than ever before, and are spending more money than in any previous year to make the Fair of 1911 the best yet.

The Western Fair is noted as the live stock exhibition par excellence of Canada; indeed it is safe to say that no other Fair excels it in this respect. As an exhibition of agricultural, horticultural and dairy products, the Western Fair has no superior, and the promise of abundant crops of all kinds encourages the belief that the display in all these departments will be numerous and varied.

While the features above referred to are the mainstay of such an exhibition, the object of the promoters being to encourage live stock and agricultural industries, the Directors realize that in this twentieth century the people look for more. They look for horse-jumping contests, the speeding of Canadian-bred horses; for special attractions, wonderful, thrilling, interesting and instructive; for lots of outdoor music; for an attractive but clean Midway, in fact for both variety and quality. All these are provided this year by the Directors of the Western Fair, and the public have learned that for them to make a promise is for it to be made good.

The Western Fair is essentially the people's fair; it was originated and has been conducted through a long series of years for their edification and entertainment, and that they appreciate the efforts that have been made in their behalf is shown by the vast throngs that each year pass through the turnstiles at Queen's Park, London.

Intending exhibitors cannot get in their applications for space in the various buildings too soon. Reduced rates on railways.
