BRIDGET AND THE HOGS.

By Thos. H. Binnie

When Bridget Callahan came to Canada she came with her own money. Money she had earned herself from her small plot of land. This acre of hers she worked as a market garden. On it she grew potatoes, cabbages and other green feeds, which she sold to the "ladies," who did nothing of the kind.

On her arrival in Grey county, she bought a plot of land near the town of Durham, and started in to supply the townspeople with fresh vegetables for their summer meals. In this there was always some waste, and on this account, she kept a few pigs, to turn it into profit. She could not bear to see any wasted. In this she was like her Scotch ancestors. Her great-great-grandmother had gone from Glasgow to Dublin in bygone days.

Bridget always kept good pigs. She would have the best. As soon as one lot was sold she would ask the hog buyer to scour the country and bring her of the best. By this she meant the hogs that would bring the highest price after they were fat. They did, for she always received a higher price than any other seller of pigs.

The plot of land next to hers was owned by Pat Connor. He also was a producer of vegetables and many times thought that his capital should be united to that of Bridget's, so that they would control the monopoly of the trade in the town. With this in view, he called several times on Bridget, and made good headway in his courtship. Bridget had few wooers, and she too began to think that their united efforts would be for bigger profits.

All went smoothly till the hog question was mentioned. Pat did not like the long, flat-sided hogs which Bridget kept for waste eaters. He thought there was nothing to them, and told his sweetheart what he thought.

"Faith, and it's the pigs you don't loike, is it? Shure, and if you don't loike them pigs, you don't need to come courtin' me. Anny one that loikes me must loike me pigs. Now Pat, you needn't worry about them pigs, for them is the best pigs in the whole county of Grey. Shure, and doesn't Mr. Ryan give me more for them pigs than he pays for any other pigs he buys? Shure Pat, you can make love to me all you loike, but you must say nothin' about them pigs at all at all."

And Pat did. He told her how badly he wanted her, and how he suffered from poor food, and she was one of the finest cooks in the whole land. Shyly he passed his arm around the back of the chair and whispered in her ear, "Bridgett, shure couldn't we share the same house and run this business together, and then we would have no one to fight agin? Woan't you marry me, acushla?"

"What about them pigs," whispered she.

"O, dog-gone the pigs. We won't keep anny, and then we will not be bothered."

This did not seem to satisfy his sweetheart, and as Pat could not get his way by persuasion, he resolved to try another method. He found some of the bulletins and reports of the different colleges and experimental farms, and took some of the information down for Bridget's benefit. The next evening he was over to see his best girl, and carried the information with him. "Shure, and 'tis a foine looking lady that you are, and a good cook, too. If all the girls in Canady were as good as you are, I would have an awful toime tendin' to my business," was his joyful greeting.

"Aw, go on wid your blarney," she retorted, "one would think you came from Killarney."

"Got some news of them pigs, acushla. Shure in all the colleges, the short fat pig makes the biggest pig in the shortest toime. Thin when they're killed, the short fat fellows dresses about 77 per cent., and the long thin ones, or what you call the bacon hog, dresses only 75 per cent., and be jabers they get far more lard from the short fellow than they do from the long slim wan," he concluded with a smile of satisfaction.

"Shure, an' I don't care two straws about the college white-shirt farmers. They don't have to make money out of them pigs, but I do, and I know that I make more out of the long slim wans, than you do out of the short fat wans. They can kill how they loike, but it's the money that I'm after, and that's what I'm going to get it I kin."

This was all the satisfaction that she would give poor Pat. Pat felt discouraged. He didn't know what to do. He was afraid he was going to lose his sweetheart. For this reason he made one final effort.

"Acushla, take them pigs and look after them as best you kin, so long as you will be my woife. Let us put your money with moine, and thin we will be able to make more money than we kin at pres-ent. If the long slim pigs make more money for you than the others, thin I am willin' to let you look after them. Say you'll be moine."

His last effort was successful, and one house sheltered them both. The bacon hog was the kind kept for waste eaters, and they made a big profit for the young Irish couple.

TRAVERSTON

Intended for last week.

Your correspondent bought ten head of fine yearlings from Mr. W.J. Black, of Berkeley, on Saturday.

The frost on Wednesday night of last week, played havoc with the corn crop, as few fields were cut.

The Edwards homestead is a lively spot these days. There are present Mrs. Eliza Cook, of Toronto; Mrs. John Warnock, of Caledon; Mrs. John Whittaker and her daughter Rita, of Port Arthur. The last two were down to Toronto Exhibition, took a run over to Niagara, then visited at Caledon, spent a day or so with kindred at Ceylon, and will leave here on Thursday to catch the Str. Manitoba for home. Miss Rita has a fine position in the Port Arthur post office. 'Tis twelve years since the family went north, and among the different members of the family they own a thousand acres of land.

Mr. Kentner, of Markdale, was out on Monday morning, and photographed the teacher and pupils of No. 5. He also took some snapshots of family groups.

Mr. and Mrs. W.L. Falkingham, and Mr. and Mrs. Drover, Mrs. F's parents, were down to London Fair for nearly a week, returning Monday. Mrs. Falkingham held a reception on Tuesday evening of last week in their honor, and about forty genial wedded folk, and a sprinkling of youth, had a most enjoyable time together.
