CHRIST'S DON'T WORRY CLUB. Text, "Be not therefore anxious for the morrow."-(R. V.) Matthew vi. 34.

The first Don't Worry club took its rise not at Battle Creek, but in Palestine. There, amid cloud crowned hills and breeze swept shore, in narrow street and dusty synagogue, Christ communicated to that little circle his own trustful spirit. Men study his every act and word under microscope of closest scrutiny, but in not a single line of his four biographers is there anything that even suggests Christ's giving way to worry. "Thy Saviour hath crucified joy," said the great infidel. Don't you believe it? No; he didn't play the comedian nor act the clown for the amusement of the crowd. He didn't come for that. But "peace" and "joy" were large words in his vocabulary. Worry is forethought gone to seed; discounts unknown sorrows of tomorrow that you may have misery today. A traitor that dampens your powder weakens your aim. Under the guise of helping you today it steals your strength for the morrow. It is mental chaos and anarchy. It is an attack of the ravenous, restless horde of the imps of fear, precluding reason, par- NORTHBOUND-First train leaves Toralyzing action, impairing appetite, disturbing sleep, stimulating disease. The full, rich strength of the subconscious mind, that which produces our best success, is tapped and wasted on worry. If I were to write a twelfth commandment it would be, "Thou shalt not worry."

"Off the Banks." Worry leaves days when all goes wrong. Your mental, moral and physical self feels foggy and soggy as a morning off the banks of Newfoundland. From 7 a. m. till 10 p. m. things "break wrong." After a worried, sleepless night you get up out of bed on the wrong side. Beefsteak is tough; coffee is muddy; some one's stolen your morning paper; you miss your car, catch a cold in your head and a cinder in your eye; there's a note due and no money to pay it; agent comes in and wants to insure your life when it's already insured for more than it's worth; you wave him out and upset your ink bottle over your typewritten letters. Shoo! You're in for a day of it. The gloom imps are camped on your trail. The day's out of joint, and no surgeon can set it. You'd shut your desk and go to the ball game only it's just started to rain. If there does come a break in the clouds, mental or physical, you discount it. Some people do that habitually. "How are you today, Aunt Hannah?" you say to your old maiden relative. "Oh, I feel pretty good, only I always feel bad when I feel good, 'cause I know I'll feel worse afterward."

"Behind the Clouds Is"-Oh, say, cheer up! "Behind the clouds is the sun still shining." "Nothing so bad it mightn't be worse." "It's always morning somewhere." "Every cloud has a silver lining." "Long lane that has no turning." "Always darkest before dawn." Of course you have troubles. So have others. I heard our little colored wash girl say to her older sister, standing scratching her tousled head, "Say, Lize, 's you got creepers?" "'F cose I has. Everybody has!" Most of our worry is selfish. We think of ourselves and our cares only. There are others. Ever keep a "worry book?" On the left hand page of the ledger each worry you've entertained; get a large 50 cent bottle of on the right the actual event, whether Parisian Sage. the worry comes true or was only a molehill foolishly turned into a moun-

He's been so busy that he's had no opportunity. Catch worry. Think of busy days and usefulness. "How dismal you look," said the bucket to his companion on the way to the well.
