THE SMALLEST MEETING YET.

It was a wet night and that is why there were so few at the meeting of the Glenelg Centre Farmers' Club on the evening of October 29th last. The subject for the evening was "Rotation of Crops," and the meeting was taken by the President. He showed that the reasons for good crop rotation were: 1st—The difference in the depth to which the roots of the plants go for food; 2nd—The different foods which the different plants require most for their nourishment; and 3rd—The keeping of the fields clear from weed, insect and disease pests. The President also sang a couple of songs, and the remainder of the evening was spent in amusements of different kinds. The next meeting will be held on November 19.

There could be no better medicine than Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. My children were all sick with whooping cough. One of them was in bed, had a high fever, and was coughing up blood. Our doctor gave them Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, and the first dose eased them, and three bottles cured them" says Mrs. R. A. Donaldson, of Lexington, Miss. For sale by all dealers.

THE OTHER SEVENTEEN

A Paper Read by Miss Edie P. Fletcher at the Teachers' Convention at Dundalk Last Month.

It has occurred to me that it would be entirely superfluous on my part to attempt to place before you my idea of the best method of teaching any of the branches of Public school work. I consider that it is a fact well recognized among all educationists that the teacher, to a great extent, makes the method, and of course, the pupils also suggest in a large measure, the ways and means of their own acquisition of knowledge, so much so, in fact, that I have yet to see two classes with which identical methods were equally successful.

I had at first thought to give a short paper on "Devices in School Management," drawing from my own experience, and aided by certain reference works in my possession, but after making a beginning, and taking several surreptitious glances at some volumes of notes laboriously compiled during my experience as teacher-in-training at Model and Normal schools, I concluded that it would be more interesting, though somewhat apart from the beaten path if I were to give a short resume of my first year's work and beg the privilege of giving any hints which I thought might be of value.

Lauder hath it, "The happy never say, nor hear said—farewell," and I was inclined to agree with him as I said "good-bye" at the station, and resolutely set my face toward Luckwood, of which place I knew just what the secretary had told me in his letter accepting my application, and that was nothing—absolutely nothing.

Through a failure to make connections, I found myself deposited at Luckwood at 9 p. m., only to discover that it was a flag-station, and that my precious trunks had gone on to the next stop. Three or four stragglers were standing around in the semi-darkness, apparently waiting to see what I would do next. I approached the nearest, a great, good-natured looking young man, and with what confidence I could muster, inquired the way to the hotel. "Why, there ain't no hotel here," was the answer. "Be you the new teacher? You is to board at Jones's. I'll see you up there, see'n' none of 'em thought it worth their while to come down to the train." And, so saying, the giant grasped my satchel, leaving me to follow, or not, as I pleased. It was so obviously the only thing to do that I followed, mechanically, heeding his instructions as to sundry mud-holes, etc., but inwardly wishing I had had sense enough to have re-boarded that train and gone—anywhere from such a place.

Arrived at the Jones mansion, we found all the family had retired, except Mr. Jones. The good-wife, however, was soon aroused, and after her came every Jones of the name, to have a first look at the new teacher. They were the soul of hospitality, and soon had me feeling that life was slightly more worth living. I inquired about my trunks, and Mr. Jones obligingly offered to bring them home the next afternoon. Alas, what was I to do in the meantime! In those precious trunks were all my books, a model timetable for eight classes, adjudged the best among some two hundred attempts. (I found out afterward it would have been of little use to me, as I had twelve classes), but that comforting assurance came too late to alleviate my despair.

In the morning I should have declared a holiday and awaited the coming of my luggage, but it was still fresh in my mind that Bagley, White, Millar, and indeed every educator of high repute since Pestalozzi had declared against anything of the kind, so I travelled up to the school in time to cover the B.B. with Arithmetic for all classes. I had disliked Mathematics, but now I viewed them with a new respect, for they prevented the constant gaze of forty young hopefuls from burning holes in my anatomy.

Soon I had the general routine of school work progressing favourably. It was a good school, presenting few special difficulties, and before long, the "seven" hours, from nine till four were pleasantly occupied. But there still bothered me those other "seventeen."

Of course, there were lessons to prepare, and I prepared them faithfully. I took long tramps after Nature Study specimens; made a pair of balances, whiled away one afternoon in watching some cabbage butterflies depositing their eggs, in order to get the exact time to complete its life history; but still I realized that valuable time was slipping away, unused, unimproved and almost unnoticed.

One day a friend of mine was enlarging on the length of time teachers have during which they are not teaching, when a teacher friend who was present assented, "Yes but we can't sleep all the time." That chance remark was the spark required. "Yes," I said to myself, "I can't sleep all the time." It was borne in upon me that after all the world keeps moving. It is not necessary to execute a retrograde movement in order to fall behind the times. All that is necessary is a pause, even momentary, and the stream has passed on, leaving us in the shallows, among a struggling crowd of more unfortunate creatures. What is it that gives some teacher, apparently no better endowed by nature, such an apparent advantage over the rank and file? It is not their activities in the seven hours from nine till four. It is their use of the other seventeen. I decided to divide my time up systematically, giving a part to recreation, part to the cultivation of the acquaintance of the people of the locality, and part to my own advancement along educational lines. As to recreation—I think it is one of the most important subjects on my self-imposed curriculum. Most teachers can teach. The trouble with them is they have not acquired the art of forgetting. The careworn expression of teachers has become proverbial and it is not because their work is harder or more worrying than other occupations, but because they do not learn to shake off their worries at the school door. Fellow-teachers, if you must carry the burden throughout the day, throw it off at evening. It may seem hard at first, but it can be accomplished. Try it. Resolve not to think at all of the petty worries, or even the larger ones, and you will be surprised how you will learn to shake off the dead mould of the school room and become a new creature after hours. Only in this way can you avoid the "school-teachers" appearance, and escape from that arbitrary manner which makes so many teachers disliked in society. For the rest—enter heartily into the life around you, and you will find yourself welcomed by all.

As to cultivating the acquaintance of the parents, it is very necessary, and besides giving you an insight into the character of the pupils that could be obtained in weeks of study, a tactful teacher can do more to insure her own popularity with the parents in a half hour's conversation than in weeks, yes months, of careful teaching. However, dignity must be maintained, and I would never, on any account, stoop to small flattery. I feel somewhat as the poet admirably expressed it

"My doctrine is to lay aside Contention, and be satisfied. Do what is right, and praise or blame. That follows, that counts jest the same. I've always noticed great success Is mixed with troubles, more or less. An' it's the man that does the best That gets more kicks than all the rest."

As to school work, its importance is too obvious to need comment. Unprepared lessons lead to hesitation and abstraction on the part of the teacher. These latter lead to disorder in the schoolroom and eventually to the teacher's downfall. A few lessons occasionally outside the curriculum are helpful to both teacher and pupils. In order to be successful a teacher must study more advanced work than that required in the Public school. There is nothing, I think, that gives a teacher greater satisfaction than the knowledge that he or she is conquering academical work of a higher standard than his or her situation calls for, and with the facilities which all our University and High school courses are now offering for extra mural work, even a very small amount of time may be profitably taken advantage of.

In closing, I leave with you two suggestions. First: Make yourself worth more money. Second: Get it.

BERKELEY WOMAN DIES IN EFFORT TO RESCUE LITTLE ONE FROM FLAMES.

Owen Sound, Oct. 31.—Mrs. Chas. Toblitt, of Berkeley, near Chatsworth, was yesterday removed to the General and Marine hospital here, suffering from terrible burns the result of a vain, but heroic effort to rescue her seven-months old child from the flames of a burning house.

Mrs. Toblitt left her baby alone in the cradle in the kitchen of her home, and went out to the barn to do the evening milking. She was in the barn less than an hour, and when she came out saw smoke and flames issuing from the house.

Her first thought was for her little one, and blind to her peril, she rushed to the kitchen and threw open the door, to find the room a mass of flames. Into this she plunged in an attempt to get the baby out of the cradle that she knew was in the midst of the fire. She was unsuccessful, and before she could regain the open air, her clothing had been burned almost entirely off her.

Some neighbors reached her and medical aid was at once called. Her condition is critical, and small hopes for her recovery are entertained.

The remains of the little child were not recovered. Mrs. Toblitt is a daughter of the late John Murray, ex-councillor of Holland township.
