The Cloth of Billiard Tables.

In the county of Gloucestershire, England, there lives a family of weavers who for generations have manufactured a cloth known as the west of England cloth, whose fineness of texture and evenness of surface have never been equaled despite thousands of dollars used for machinery in an attempt to duplicate this product. The secret of this Gloucestershire family has been well kept, and they are the buyers of the finest grade of wool that the market is able to produce. Months of hard labor and energy is spent in the manufacture of 100 yards of the material, and compensation for its ownership is life among the buyers, owing to the limited quantity available. All professional billiard players, both in Great Britain, where their game demands a higher degree of accuracy than that of the United States, and the American players usually carry along their own cloth, which is placed on the tables before every important game.—New York Sun.

Some Secret Burials.

Alaric, king of the Visigoths and their victorious leader, was buried about 1500 years ago by his soldiers in the bed of the river Eusento, in southern Italy. They first turned the waters into another channel and, after burying their chief and his treasures, let them flow back again. His grave was dug by prisoners, who were all afterward put to death, so that the Romans might never find his grave. Atilla, king of the Huns, was buried A. D. 453 on a wide plain in three coffins—one of gold, one of silver and the third of iron. In his case, too, all the prisoners who were compelled to dig his grave were immediately killed. Another secret burial in later history was that of Fernando de Soto, the discoverer of the Mississippi, whose coffin was sunk at midnight in the middle of the broad stream to conceal his death from the natives, who had been told that he was an immortal child of the sun.

The Lovers' Leap.

Sappho killed herself by jumping from the Lovers' leap, a Leucadian cliff. This leap was often taken by lovestruck persons, who believed that if they survived the fall they would be effectually cured of a hopeless passion. The leaps were always witnessed by crowds of spectators, and the would be suicides were in no way interfered with by the state. Boats were in attendance below to pick up the leapers if they came to the surface of the sea after the plunge. Sappho had a passion for a young man who did not return her love and leaped from the cliff in order to be cured. She perished in the fall. So also did Artemesia and many other celebrities. Piny tells a curious story of an old Athenian miser who was in love with his cook and, desiring a cure, went to have a look at the cliff. He peeped over, shook his head, went home and married the cook.

Old World Armorer.

In olden times the armorer's work was not of a rough and ready description, but generally bore the signs of highly wrought workmanship. The various pieces of a suit fit into their positions to a nicety, there are no rough edges and, as a rule, very little that is merely careless decorative work. Fashion and reputation have left their hall mark on the armor of each period, and, like most other industries, it had its distinguished masters. The name of Jacob Topf is, for example, still famous in England, and such names as those of Lorenzo Colman of Augsburg, a German armorer of the sixteenth century; Lucio Pinellino, a Milanese, and the Wolfs of Landsbut, a family of armorers that are supposed to have worked for Philip II. of Spain, are celebrated in their own countries.—Argonaut.

A "Fowl" Ball.

A ball game between two semipro teams, one colored, was played on the north side and attracted a numerous following of negroes, who went a long way to root for their team. They occupied a section by themselves, says the Chicago Post.

A foul ball went in among them and did not come back, causing a red haired contender to go to that part of the stand and yell: "Throw that ball back. What do you think it is—a chicken?"

In the Wrong Place.

The meek looking man walked up to the book counter. "I want something to keep me home at night, show me my faults, tell me how to spend my money." "Hold on, old man," said the clerk; "you're in the wrong department. Marriage bureau on the left, three aisles down."—Philadelphia Record.

Good Advice.

A Sewickley father recently gave his son some excellent advice. "Now that you are married, my son," said he, "listen to me." "What is it, dad?" "Try to be a husband, not merely an ex-bachelor."—Pittsburgh Post.

Stung.

"Yes, Waldo, appearances is deceitful! Here I followed a guy who looked like a millionaire ten blocks to get his cigar butt and it ain't nuthin' but a 'two-fer' after all."—New Orleans Picayune.

Sarcastic.

Cholly—D'you know, I'm sometimes inclined to think—Clara (encouragingly)—Why don't you do it, Cholly? It's not such a difficult thing if you really try.

Life is too short for stupid quarrels.

—Philip Gibbs.

It Ended All Right.

The old lady who entered the coach at a country station had an anxious face and confided to her neighbors that she had but once before been on a railroad train. This was soon evident after the first half hour, when every time the train stopped she inquired if it was New York. Then she became anxious lest the train should arrive late, and "Maybe Lyddy would think I wasn't coming," she said. "Didn't you tell her which train you would take?" "Yes, indeed!" said the old lady. "I told her to meet me at the New York evening train. There isn't more than one, is there?" "She was somewhat flustered when assured that there was more than one train, but was reassured when she talked to the conductor. "All right, mother," said that functionary; "I'll stop the train at New York and see that you get off safely." And when the train rolled into the station and the old lady met Lyddy and embraced her the passengers exchanged a smile of pleasure.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

How the Salmon Leaps.

Scientists as well as laymen tell extraordinary stories of the wonderful leaps whereby salmon ascend waterfalls. One investigator who has studied the salmon of southeastern Alaska asserts that these fish do not select a particular point of attack in endeavoring to surmount a fall. They show a remarkable lack of accuracy as well as of definiteness in their movement. When trying to ascend a fall they sail through the air, with the body rigid and the fins spread and held tense, and at the instant when the momentum of the jump is lost they impart a rapid and powerful vibration to the tail. This occurs whether the jump is successful or not. Should the fish reach water at the top of the fall this motion insures the maintenance of its position. In open water they jump side wise instead of lengthwise, and there is no movement of the tail.—Harper's.

Circles of Latitude.

Each circle of latitude keeps at the same distance from the equator entirely around the earth. Suppose that the arctic circle should be laid with a band of bright metal so that it could be seen for fifty miles each way from a peak. Then, to the eye, the curvature would be a matter of individual judgment. Face the west, then some would say the line is straight; others, curved to the right. The curvature could be detected on that circle of latitude with instruments. As one approached the pole the curvature would rapidly become more and more apparent. Go to within one-half a mile of the poles, then a circle of latitude would be like a race track one mile in diameter. When the sea is still I cannot detect the curvature of the surface of the water, but persons have told me that they can.—Edgar Lucien Larkin in New York American.

A Case in Arithmetic.

The teacher was hearing her class of small boys in mathematics. "Edgar," she said, "if your father can do a piece of work in seven days and your Uncle William can do it in nine days, how long would it take both of them to do it?" "They would never get it done," answered the boy earnestly. "They would sit down and tell fish stories."—New York Post.

What the Teacher Taught Him.

The small boy had just returned home after a most tumultuous day at school. "What lesson," asked his father, "was the most impressed on you today by the teacher?" "Dat I need a thicker pair of pants."—Ladies' Home Journal.

Friendliness.

It is not wise to rush into violent friendships with every one you meet, but it is a great mistake not to be on friendly terms with those with whom you come in contact.

Automatic Cooking Boxes.

Automatic cooking boxes were in general use among the Hebrews nearly 2,000 years ago. The Greek and Roman writers frequently refer to them. In his edition of "Juvenal" for example, his friendlier cites a commentator who refers to "the Jews who a day before the Sabbath put their viands hot into the cooking boxes, the pots being covered with napkins and wrapped about with hay, so that they may have warm food on the Sabbath."
