MADGE ELLIS,

Put Her Duty Before Anything we have not been able to locate her

By ROSALIE G. MENDEL.

Nurse Ellis rushed up the boarding house stairs, burst into the little hall bedroom and exclaimed to her roommale, "Hurrah! My typhoid case is declared cured. I'm. discharged and Glenn Garnett has asked me to celebrate my freedom from the tyranny of a cranky patient by going to the theater with him this evening. Isn't that jolly? I'm just aching in every bone for a good time-especially with

"Well, you certainly deserve it after the strenuous siege you have had," answered Sue Darrow as she pinned her cuffs in her nurse's costume. "I only hope you manage to leave before another call comes for you. You're such a popular little nurse that you are always in demand."

"If the superintendent of the hospital, the assistant superintendent and all the doctors took sick I would refuse to go on duty tonight," exclaimed Madge as she combed her long golden hair. "This is the fourth evening Glenn and I have made arrangements to spend together and every time I've had a 'hurry call' at the last minute. Fate could not be so unkind as to spoil this long anticipated pleasure

Good-bye, dear," said Sue, as she grasped her suit case to report for night duty. "Have a good time, and tomorrow you can tell me all about your lark."

Just as Nurse Ellis finished dressing in her new white serge suit and becoming picture hat the telephone gave a long, loud ring. Madge stared I won't answer it." Another and another ring and then she grabbed the receiver and called, "Well?"

"This is Dr. Burns," came the anto report on at once."

Madge. "It's impossible. Get one of the other girls."

"What's that? You're not refusing me? Come, come, girl. You are the only one I'll have for this case. I'll call for you in my machine in twenty minutes.

"I hate to say 'No,' but-oh-I simply can't 'go on' again tonight."

"I guess you are not yourself. This is the first time you haven't been ready to fly at a summons day or night," said the puzzled doctor.

"I know, but I am worn out, body and soul; I need this one evening for myself."

"I'm sorry and disappointed," said the doctor as he hung up the receiver Madge sat down in the low rocking chair and had a good cry. Then she flew to the telephone, called Dr. Burns and told him that she had changed her mind and that she was ready to report on the case. He answered "Good, I knew you were too loyal a little soul to fail me."

Then she telephoned to Glenn. "It's impossible for me to keep our en gagement. Am dreadfully sorry. An other operation, and-"

"Madge Ellis," answered Glenn, indignantly, "I won't listen to a refusa. You have simply got to go with me tonight. You're not the only nurse in the world. It's ridiculous that we can't have one evening together."

"I can't, Glenn. Don't urge me any more. If you do I'll cry in just minute. You go and take some one care to go with." "It's as hard for me as for you,

Glenn. But a nurse's duty comes before anything else."

"I see it does." answered Glenn angrily. "You really don't care enough about going, Miss Ellis, otherwise you could arrange it. Good-bye."

Madge quickly changed her new white suit and hat for her nurse's baked for about a month before being here, is an enthusiastic bowler, friends at Stayner. costume and was waiting at the window when Dr. Burns drove up.

The operation was a dangerous one. Through the long, hard night the pa- young ladies who have tient's life hung on a thread. But in holding evangelistic services in the morning she was better. Miss Ellis sought her couch for a wellearned rest when released from duty. She awoke after a refreshing sleep side, his arms clasped about the fragile little old lady, who was contentedly stroking his hair. The young man looked familiar. In amaze-

Then, turning to Madge, he added, "Dr. Burns told me that your skillful and devoted attention did as much to save my mother's life as the operation. Madge, I can't express my gratitude. What can you think of a selfish brute like me who so cruelly reproached you for doing your duty? How you must despise me."

"I don't exactly despise you," murmured Madge, putting her hand on his sleeve. "And I think you have the dearest mother in the world."

"Then let her be your mother, too," a mother's love, and I need yours." (Copyright, 1912, by W. G. Chapman.)
