WONDERFUL FEAT OF GERMAN SEAMEN

British Liner Appam Seized by German Steamer and Towed into American Port

Given up for lost days ago, the British passenger liner Appam, plying in the West African trade, sailed like an apparition into Hampton Roads, Virginia on Tuesday last, flying the German naval ensign and with her ship's company under guard of a German prize crew.

Captured off Madeiras According to the story told by Lieut. Berge the Moewe captured the Appam, bound from Dakar, French West Africa, for Liverpool, after a brief hour of resistance, on January 16, sixty miles north of the Madeira Islands.

View of English Press The news of the capture of the British liner Appam electrified London. The incident is regarded as unique in the history of war, and full recognition is given the German commander's enterprise and originality.
