The Lord knows where.

The Navy is very old and very wise. Much of her wisdom is an record and available for reference; but more of it works in the unconscious blood of those who serve her. She has a thousand years of experience and can s find a precedent or a parallel for any situation that the force of the weather or the malice of the King's enemies may bring about.

The main principles of sea-warfare hold good throughout all ages, and as far as the Navy has been allowed to put out her strength, these principles have been applied over all the seas of all the world. In matters of detail, the navy, to whom all days are alike, has simply returned to the practice and resurrected the spirit of old days.

And there is always the enemy submarine with a price on her head, whom the Trawler Fleet hunts and traps with zeal and joy. Add to this, that there are boats, fishing for real fish, to be protected in their work at sea or chased off dangerous areas where, because they are strictly forbidden to go, they naturally repair; and you will begin to get some idea of what the Trawler or Auxiliary Fleet does.

A Really Simple Principle

The principle is simple enough. Its application depends on circumstances and surroundings. One type of German submarine meant for murder off the coasts may use a winding and rabbit-like track between shoals where the choice of water is limited. heir career is rarely long, but while it lasts moderately exciting.

Others, told off for deep sea assas sinations, are attended to quite quiet ly and without any excitement at all. the North Sea, making no distinction between neutrals and allied ships. These carry guns and since their work keeps them a good deal on the whom are settled in the near dissurface, the Trawler Fleet, as we trict. Mr. and Mrs Bell were born know, engages them there-the submarine firing, sinking and rising in unexpected quarters; the trawler firing, dodging, and trying to ram.

The trawlers are strongly built and can stand a great deal of punishment. Yet, again, other German submarines hang about the skirts of fishing fleets and fire into the brown of them. When the war was young this gave splendidly "frightful" results, but for some reason or other, the game is not as popular as it used to be.

Lastly, there are German submar-

A Permanent Decoration

Every British tar wears a perman ent memorial of the hero of Trafalgar. The three rows of white tape round the edging of the familiar blue sailor collar commemorate Nelson's victories at Copenhagen, the Nile, and Trafalgar; whilst the black silk scarf was adopted in mourning for the great Admiral as a spontaneous tribute by the seamen themselves, and has been retained ever since by the authorities
