chard pruning give good satisfaction some paraffin oil and then wash it when used upon limbs smaller than well with hot soda water. Finally three inches in diameter. When care is taken to cut through the bark all around the branches to be removed, the wounds heal over much better than when the growing layer of bark and young wood is crushed by being squeezed from opposite sides without loing cut around first. One caution is necessary in using this implement: When making cuts of forking limbs, it is necessary to avoid bearing down because the main branch to be left is likely to split and a heavy load of fruit the following summer is almost sure to break the limb at this point. Effort should always be made to lift when making such cuts. It is a good plan always to cut off the branch a foot or so beyond the point where the crotch is, and then to remove the stub with a second cut.
