her lips were colorless. He sprang promptly to her assistance, and she instantly transferred the sustaining hand to his wrist, which she clutched spasmodically. "What is it?" he demanded solicitously, yet with a restraining thought of the ease with which any crowd's attention is attracted. "What has happened?"

"No, No, No! Take Me Away—To the Kohinur—at Once."

mastering emotion—"please get me back to the Kohinur as quickly as you can." "But you are not fit," he protested, for despite her nervously tight grip on his wrist, she was still swaying. "If you can walk to one of the tables, perhaps a little wine—"

She broke in almost fiercely: "No, no, no! Take me away—to the Kohinur—at once. I can make it if you will let me hold your arm." She was fairly dragging him along the wide hallway toward the entrance. "Your veil—" he reminded her. She quickly drew it over the lower part of her face, and acknowledged his attention in the same strained voice. "Thank you. You are very thoughtful. Oh, please hurry!"

Already her strength and composure were returning, and by the time they arrived outside she had abandoned his supporting arm and was swiftly leading the way down to the landing. And thus it was that inside of a half-hour, Captain Phinney, who had remained every second watchful, saw the pair as they hurried to the waiting launch. Something in their haste quickened his faculties, and he took up his station at the gangway, and waited.

When the launch touched the accommodation-steps, where the sailor held it secure with a boat-hook, the girl got out first, and Tom noted, without a word to Mercer. Holding tightly to the hand-rail, she came rapidly up to the deck.

He heard her utter a little sobbing gasp; then her knees doubled under her, and he caught her as she fell. He was filled with a sudden blinding rage. "You damned cur!" he roared at Mercer. "You'll answer to me for this!" But the limp form in his arms was not unconscious, only weak. "He's not to blame," she whispered tremulously. "Take me to Jessie. Carry me."

CHAPTER VI.

The Man of Iron Speaks. The unhesitating assurance of her request, with its unmistakable import of dependence on him in her moment of need, thrilled every fiber of Tom's being. He swept her up into his arms as easily as if she had been a little child, and as tenderly. "Get Molly," he curtly ordered Mercer, then started with her to her room. Her eyes were closed, the long dark lashes lay upon her cheeks, and the lovely face wore a pinched look.

"Delia—sweetheart," he muttered—"if I could only take your trouble upon myself!" The lids fluttered wearily, and she looked up at him with a wan little smile. "You can't, Tom," he heard her whisper. After seeing her safely in Molly's care, and being assured that the other ladies were notified, he went back to his first officer, convinced that either an explanation was due him from Mercer, or else he owed Mercer an apology. But the latter bore no grudge for Tom's involuntary outburst. "She was phoning somebody," he said, "and learned something that knocked her all of a heap." He recounted all that had happened, and wound up by saying:

"There's a whole lot more mystery about this little old boat than I like. What do you make of it all, anyway?" "Nothing," Tom curtly replied. "And I'm getting pretty tired of it myself. Old Willard doesn't want to send for a doctor to look at Callis. The fellow hasn't come around yet. Willard claims to be something of a doctor himself, and that nothing serious is the matter. Well, the blame's all his, if the chap dies."

"Hope he does," was Mercer's unfeeling comment. "He handed me an awful wallop." Some time after midnight, Molly came to him in the chart-house with a message that relieved his disquiet. Said Molly:

"Miss Delia wants me to tell you that she's all right now, and she hopes she hasn't caused you any anxiety." Before breakfast next morning—Thursday—he saw her, dressed for the street in the same becoming blue gown she had worn the previous night. Her face was drawn and pale and her eyes held a troubled look, as if she had passed a sleepless night. Nevertheless she smiled as she greeted him. "I am afraid I must cause more bother," she said. "I am obliged positively to go down-town this morning—I got no farther than the Claremont last night, you know."

"Before breakfast?" exclaimed Tom. "Yes," with quiet gravity. "I am going with Miss Willard." Miss Willard! Then one of the other ladies was old Willard's daughter—Jessie, doubtless.

"Delia," he said after a moment, "do you care if I go with you this morning?" She colored faintly and dropped her gaze, but her gravity did not change. "I shall be very glad to have you go over in the launch with us and get us a cab—if such things are procurable so far from town. But I'm sorry the errand is of a private nature—I abhor mystery and secrecy—but it is not mine."

"I don't want to intrude," he hesitated. She flashed a sly look at him. "Little good it does me to object," she said—"Here's Jessie." A stateroom door opened to disclose a girl who, if she was not so beautiful as Delia, Tom was obliged to admit that she came very near being so. Hers was a contrasting type; black hair and eyes, but a clear complexion; and she was as tastefully and becomingly gowned, though in light gray, as the other girl.

She acknowledged Tom's introduction so absently that he received the impression that her mind was set upon something afar off and that she was fiercely impatient of the intervening distance. She seemed to move in a sort of stony despair that would crush her down presently if she could not find relief.

And on the way over to the landing, and up to the Claremont, whose garage supplied them with an automobile, she uttered no word and remained indifferent to her surroundings. When he had seen them in the car, Delia offered him a hand. "I suppose the launch will come for us?" she said with a sober little smile.

"If you don't mind, I'll meet you here—any time you say," returned Tom. "I want to run down to my club and look up a friend, then I'll be free." Delia glanced doubtfully at Jessie Willard. "We might take you as far as Central park," she proposed. "Thank you—if I'll not be in the way."

And the long ride toward was made in silence, save for an occasional remark from Delia, to which Tom could find only the most perfunctory of responses. Jessie Willard's secret distress sat heavily upon them all. As eagerly disposed as Tom was to be in Delia's company, yet it was with a sense of relief that he separated from the two girls, after agreeing to rejoin them at the Claremont at noon. Thirty minutes later he was at the Powhatan, learning with incredulous surprise that Van Vechten had not

SUCCESS OF A NEW REMEDY FOR BACKACHE, KIDNEYS, RHEUMATISM.

Dear Mr. Editor—I suffered for years with backache. Last March I tried "Anuric" and have used this new kidney medicine recently discovered by Dr. Pierce, and it was wonderful the way it eased the pain and gave me relief in such a short time. I have tried several medicines, but "Anuric" is the only one that gave satisfaction. I feel it my duty to recommend "Anuric Tablets" to any one who suffers as I did. (Signed) MRS. MARGARET E. SNIDER.

NOTE: Folks in town and adjoining counties are delighted with the results they have obtained by using "ANURIC," the newest discovery of Dr. Pierce, who is head of the INVALIDS' HOTEL and SURGICAL INSTITUTE, in Buffalo, N. Y. Those who started the day with a backache, stiff legs, arms and muscles, and an aching head (worn out before the day began because they were in and out of bed half a dozen times at night) are appreciating the perfect rest, comfort and new strength they obtained from Dr. Pierce's Anuric Tablets. To prove that this is a certain uric acid solvent and conquers headache, kidney and bladder diseases and rheumatism, if you've never used the "Anuric," cut this out and send ten cents to Doctor Pierce for a large sample package. This will prove to you that "Anuric" is thirty-seven times more active than lithia in eliminating uric acid—and the most perfect kidney and bladder corrector. If you are a sufferer, go to your best druggist and ask for a 50-cent box of "Anuric." You run no risk for Dr. Pierce's good name stands behind this wonderful new discovery as it has for the past half century for his "Golden Medical Discovery," a general tonic made from roots with pure glycerine which makes the blood pure, his "Favorite Prescription" for liver women and "Pleasant Pellets" for weak men.
