TREATING ELECTRIC SHOCK.

How to treat a person who has received a severe electric shock is best described by quoting from the Scientific American the account of how one man did it to a workman who had touched a wire carrying a current of 2,300 volts and was apparently killed.

"A lineman immediately took hold of the ankles of the limp body, lifting it until the whole weight rested on the neck and letting it fall. He then took a pair of connectors and hammered the soles of the injured man's feet without removing his shoes. Another lineman opened the man's mouth, pulled forward the swallowed tongue (which occurs in electric shock) and was about to begin the Schaeffer prone method of resuscitation when the man returned to life. He was removed to the hospital and is now well, though suffering very severely from his burns."

MUTINY IN GERMAN NAVY, SAY TO-DAY'S DAILY PAPERS.

A despatch from Washington, of October 10th, says:

"Few despatches since the war began have created more interest at the navy department than to-day's report from Amsterdam telling of a revolt in the German navy. Officers unhesitatingly declared that the story, so far not confirmed in official reports, was one of the most encouraging signs of the year for the allies and probably one of the most ominous from the German point of view. They pointed out that while the allied powers have noted repeatedly recently in their official statement that the morale of the German troops was declining, and observers have believed that the end would come in food and labor riots, or perhaps in a political revolt, there has been nothing to suggest that the iron discipline of the German military system had lost its hold over the fighting millions in the slightest degree.

The declining morale of the western front noted, it was said, has shown itself in the feeble character of counter-attacks as compared with the all but irresistible drive a year ago. Assault after assault has dashed itself to pieces before the French and British trenches. The revolt in the navy, these officers said, was a more serious matter for Germany. The sailors generally have not been subjected to the battering of the guns day after day, month after month. They insisted that if there is discontent among the sailors with their condition, it must be even greater in the army.

As one possible explanation of the navy revolt, they pointed out that ever since submarine warfare was started by the Germans, the British have adopted the consistent policy of suppressing information as to the fate of the submarines sent to the bottom by their patrols. The policy was adopted as a deliberate method of breaking down the morale of the submarine crews.

Crews for the U-boats are understood to be drafted from the big seas fleet as needed. The big ships are practically idle. They have done little since the North Sea fight but steam out to target practice behind mine-protected zones. For the men of the ships there has been nothing but the deadly routine of this business, varied only by calls for duty and probable death on the submarines.

FRENCH-CANADIAN SITUATION AS SEEN IN UNITED STATES.

(From The Boston Transcript.)

This dastardly attempt is clearly a result of the propaganda against conscription, and against loyalty to the Dominion Government, which has been going on for some time in the province of Quebec, and elsewhere in French circles in Canada. The propaganda has tended to make French Canada believe that it might or might not, exactly as it pleased, support the Government at Ottawa and obey or disobey the legislation enacted by the parliament of the Dominion. This is a logical deduction from the recent declaration and the warning of Cardinal Begin, Archbishop of Quebec, that the legislators at Ottawa, "little enlightened and somewhat ill-willed, would not make a choice (in the matter of conscription) that we would approve." In other words, it has not been a matter of what the parliament decreed, but of what Cardinal Begin and others would approve. Is it any wonder that French-Canadians plot destruction under such suggestions?
