

CANADA'S SEASIDE AND MOUNTAIN LINKS PLEASE GOLFERS

THE history of golf in Canada is a long story. The first game played on this continent took place in this country and the development of the game here has gone forward with rapid strides. To-day the Dominion is dotted with links noted for their excellence from St. Andrews-by-the-Sea in New Brunswick, to Vancouver in British Columbia. Guests are welcome everywhere and United States experts like "Chick" Evans and Oswald Kirby are unanimous in declaring that the quality of Canadian golf is very high. Canada's first club was the Royal Montreal founded in 1873 about fifteen years before St. Andrews Golf Club, the first in the United States, was started in Yonkers, N.Y.

is a seaside course on Passamaquoddy Bay, an estuary of the Bay of Fundy so near Maine that a long driver could almost put one over the international fence. St. Andrews is not a name to be taken lightly, and when Sir William Van Horne and Lord Shaughnessy had the 6,100 yard New Brunswick links laid out, they made it worthy of its great Scotch namesake, the mother links of the golf world. Many of the holes are on sloping ground with the picturesque panorama of the bay in one direction, and the green forests in another. In addition to the regular 18-holes, there is a 9-holes course for ladies and the Algonquin is headquarters for golfers.

of the most interesting and picturesque links in the world. Banff Golf Course, this year expanded to 18 holes, is nearly a mile above sea-level along the banks of the Bow River. From the edge of the fairways majestic mountains tower a mile above the links and the golfer enjoys his favorite sport in a scenic setting of unforgettable beauty. Now and then the "gallery" watching the game is augmented by wild mountain goats who peer down from some lofty ledge at the players. The links are in charge of a competent professional and are a fine test of the game.

The death occurred on Monday evening at the home of Mr. Thomas Mountain of the eight-months old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. M. Hiscox (nee Florence Mountain), of Buffalo. Mrs. Hiscox came over about a month ago to visit with her parents. The children had contracted whooping-cough, which developed into pneumonia with the little girl, causing death. The funeral took place on Tuesday afternoon to Durham cemetery. Miss Agnes Petty returned on Monday from a trip as far West as British Columbia.

Bargain-Hunters

In this community are hundreds of individuals and families on the watch for an advertisement which will offer them what they want at an advantageous price. Call them bargain-hunters if you will, but there is nothing wrong in waiting for a bargain, especially when the seller is anxious to sell at a reduced price. One family wants a new carpet—the need is not urgent. Another family is looking forward to buying dining-room furniture it may not be for a twelvemonth. One man is thinking of buying himself a watch. One woman a shopping bag; another an umbrella. All can be made to buy earlier—by advertising.

A NOTE TO MERCHANTS

Stimulate business by the offer of some slow-moving lines at special prices. Brighten up business by advertising some desirable goods at reduced prices. Make advertising banish dull business. Often you can tempt the buyer who is biding his or her time, to buy from you—at a time of your naming.

ANOTHER ZANE GREY STORY IS TOLD ON THE SCREEN

William Fox, who has produced on the screen with singular impressiveness several of Zane Grey's stirring stories of western life and adventure—notably "Riders of the Purple Sage" and "The Rainbow Trail" with William Farnum—has filmed another of this famous author's stories, "The Last Trail," directed by the well-known Emmett J. Flynn, will be presented as a special production at the Veteran Star Theatre to-morrow and Saturday night, September 1st and 2nd. The leading role is assumed by the stalwart Maurice Flynn while the dainty Eya Novak has the feminine lead, and the statuesque Rosemary They appears in a prominent part.

The story of "The Last Trail" is built upon the operations of a lone bandit known as the "Night Hawk," and contains intensely dramatic situations, threaded by a love romance unusual in its development. The great climax at the close of the story involves the criminal breaking of a big dam on the mountain and the consequent flooding and destruction of a village far below. The making of these scenes—for which both village and concrete dam were constructed—is said to have been a task involving large expenditure of time, labor and money.

"The Last Trail" will be here for two days only, to-morrow and Saturday.

"A CONNECTICUT YANKEE" COMING NEXT WEEK

The management of the Veteran Star Theatre have made arrangements for the showing of "A Connecticut Yankee" here on Tuesday and Wednesday of next week, September 5th and 6th. This rollicking photoplay is adapted from Mark Twain's book, "A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court," and is a scream from first to last. Under the heading "Two Hours of Laughter," Arthur Weigall, famous cinema critic of London, writing in The Daily Mail, says:

"In the articles which the editor of the Daily Mail has asked me to write in regard to the harmful or beneficial influence of the kinematograph upon its patrons, I propose to treat the matter with great seriousness, as being a subject of the highest national importance.

"There is so much that is poisonous in the films, so much, too, that is excellent; and, whether it be for good or for ill, the influence and power of this new art is now beyond all computation and its ramifications already extend into the little by-ways and corners of our Western life.

"We need, therefore, to realize, where this new force is leading us, and we have to consider how best to harness it to the world's good purpose.

are entirely dispelled for the moment by the nature of the photo-play which happens to be the subject of this first criticism. "A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court" is a rollicking and inconsequent farce; and writing, as now I must, after two hours of more or less continuous laughter, I do not feel inclined to find in this delightful production a text for anything in the nature of a sermon. It is sheer delicious fooling.

"The story is based on Mark Twain's book, and the plot has been modernized, so that we get knights driving in automobiles of "1921 model," Arthur's hosts mounted on motorcycles, the hero ringing up the heroine on the 'phone, references to 'dry' America, and sentiments expressed in the latest New York slang. Yet the adapter has so caught the spirit of the book that the humor is Mark Twain's even though the language and the action belong, thus, to to-day.

"The sub-titles (i. e., the words thrown upon the screen) are a delight throughout; and the robust slang has been handled with such art that there is a sort of subtle and delicate drollery in it which keeps the audience convulsed.

"A man sitting next to me, who was reduced to hysterical giggles, turned to me and said, 'I can't help laughing because it's so darned silly!' And if I add that the silliness is brilliant I shall have said all that is necessary to say and shall have indicated that the spirit has not been lost of that kindly humorist who lived in no greater hope than to leave to posterity a legacy of laughter."

Commenting on the same picture, the London Financial Times said:

"A screaming funny adaptation of Mark Twain's famous novel, "A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court," was presented on the film at the Alhambra Theatre on Monday, and right from the start set the audience in roars of laughter, which continued throughout the play. The screen version deviates considerably from the plot of the book, but the foundation of the story is there all through, and whatever liberties may have been taken by the adapter are fully excused by the sight of a 'cavalade' of armor-clad knights, with lances at the tilt, and mounted on motorcycles, led to the rescue of King Arthur and the Connecticut Yankee by Sir Lancelot in a Ford car.

"The film has been most popular in the United States for some time past, and it is due to the enterprise of Sir Oswald Stoll that its release on this side has been expedited by eighteen months or more. On Monday the picture was witnessed by Queen Alexandra, accompanied by Princess Victoria.

The London Daily Sketch says: "Queen Alexandra and other members of the Royal family were present yesterday at the Alhambra, where the film version of Mark Twain's "A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court" opened the cinema season.

"A crowded house was kept in tears of laughter at the drolleries of the 'Yankee.'

"Nothing has yet been screened so funny as Sir Lancelot and his knights setting out to the rescue of the King on a Ford car and hundreds of motorcycles."

This big picture will be at the Veteran Star Theatre on Tuesday and Wednesday of next week, September 5th and 6th. Don't miss. Admission 35c. and 15c.
