During the past twelve months I have prosecuted and had sent to offences against young girls under sixteen years of age-one this morning-but I fear that only a mere tithe of the offences which should have been prosecuted have ever been brought to my attention and many other girls have been wrecked on the rugged rocks of immorality, and those responsible for their downfall have gone free.

In many cases I have had to send distracted mothers away with heart break in their eyes and voices because I could not, under the present law, which requires the girl's story to be corroborated, advise them to take proceedings against their daughters. The Police Magistrate. the County Judge and I have had many conversations as to what we shall do to stem the flood of crime of this sort which seems so full, but we can only administer the law as we find it, and on the strictest rules of legal evidence.

Sending these men who are convicted to penitentiary or the reformatory does not seem to help much and certainly does not restore these children, for such I call them, to their former happiness and innocence, and many children born out of wedlock without there being any legal determination as to by whom the flame of their lives have been kindled.

There must be a cause for all these sad and sordid cases and it seems to me that the parents and the teachers in our schools should take this question up more seriously and teach the boys and girls who are under their care the enormity of the
